Funeral services for Mrs. Julia Spanton Taylor, age 48, former Florence restaurant operator, were held at the Tharp & Stith funeral home, Florence, at 2 p. m. Sunday, with burial in Florence Cemetery.

Mrs. Taylor died late Thursday at Booth Hospital following an illness of eight months. She had operated the restaurant prior to her illness. Mrs. Taylor was a member of the Florence Baptist Church.

She leaves her husband, Harry Taylor, inspector for the Army Ordnance Department, Muncie, Ind.; two sons, Corp George Edward Taylor, who was stationed at Pearl Harbor when it was bombed by the Japs and who now is on duty in the South Pacific, and Harvey Taylor, Florence and a daughter, Miss Lillie Taylor, Florence, survive her. Also surviving her are another brother, Earl Spanton, Latonia Lakes, Kenton county, and four sisters, Mrs. Inez Dameron and Mrs. Lillie Linz, both of Latonia Lakes; Mrs. Florence Lockwood, Dayton, Ky., and Mrs. Frances Richardson, of Covington.

©GREGORY W.N.U. RELEASE

THE STORY SO FAR: Ann Lee and Cole Cody, beneficiaries under two identical wills of Old Bill Cole, sought to discover who had fired the fatal bullet at Old Bill. Suspicion centered around Rance Waldron, who, posing as Old Bill's nephew, was living at the ranch when Ann and Cody arrived. Doc Joe and the Judge, commissioned by Old Bill to carry out his last wishes, were waylaid and shot by Rance Waldron. Believing both men dead, and to divert suspicion, Rance killed his accomplice, Tom Gough. But Doc Joe did not die, and he was at the ranch to lend a hand when Cole Cody decided to lick Rance Waldron, who gave up almost at once.

Now concludes the story.

CHAPTER XIX

The gun fell from Waldron's fingers. Little Ann Lee, standing so close to them both now, caught it up, ran for the other, backed off and stood in a corner with both weapons in her hands.

"All right," Waldron said, "I know when I'm licked."

Cody shook his head. He was thinking of the old Judge, of old Early Bill, even of Tom Gough shot like a dog. He said quietly,

"No, Waldron, you're not licked yet. Stand up."

Waldron stood up. New rage reddened the pin-points of his eyes, new strength flowed into him and perhaps new courage. He charged like a bull—

Bill Cody struck the one blow then that was like a coup de grace. It took Rance Waldron on the point of the chin; it seemed to lift him inches from the floor. And this time when he fell, whether taunted by words or threatened with further bodily punishment, he was beyond rising.

Ann Lee thought him dead. So did Aunt Jenifer. So, for that matter, did Doc Joe.

In the kitchen, "Oh, Cole Cody! Your poor dear face!" gulped little Ann Lee. "Your poor eye!" and tears began spattering like summer rain.

Bill Cody caught her in his arms; he forgot the unloveliness of his battered face and crookedly leering eye; he drew her tight and tighter and kissed her. And it is of record that Ann Lee returned his kiss exactly the way it was received, a fact to be sworn to if necessary by Cal Roundtree who, just then bursting into the room stood a moment transfixed on the threshold.

Cal virtually brushed Ann Lee aside, grasping Bill Cole Cody by an arm, yanking him close, then whispering into his ear.

"I bet Rance Waldron's here, from the looks of you," was what he said. "And, Cody—"

"No secrets from Ann Lee," said Cody, pulling away. "Sure he's here. And so is old Doc, save both Ann and Aunt Jenifer know that, too."

Doc Joe and Aunt Jenifer, hearing voices, came into the kitchen.

"Keep all this dark from Waldron until tomorrow," said Cal Roundtree. "That's all I ask."

"That's fair enough, Cal," nodded old Doc Joe. "Only just what is it that we're to keep dark?"

But at that Cal closed his mouth after the fashion of buttoning it. Then he shook his head. Finally he said:

"Tell you at sun-up. Just keep Rance Waldron alive and handy. 'Night, folks."

Before sun-up all in the house breakfasted, even to a savage, sullen Rance Waldron, save Doc Joe alone who as yet wanted Waldron to know nothing about his presence, about his still being above ground. Yet Waldron, though battered and angry, had a certain malicious grin in his eye. Over the coffee he said with a dash of his old cock-sure arrogance,

"My lawyer's coming out this morning. The sheriff will be with him or close behind. This place is mine, is going to be proved mine, and every darned one of you interlopers is going to clear out, bag and baggage."

Cal Roundtree came up from the bunkhouse. He carried an open envelope in his hand. He cleared his throat, forgot all about saying good morning, and announced a bit of news that came pretty close to knocking several people out of their chairs,

"Me," said Cal, "I just got a letter last night. It's a letter from a guy by name of Mr. William Cole, known far and wide as Early Bill."

The first to gasp out a word was Rance Waldron, hastily on his feet.

"You fool! Early Bill's dead and buried! Are you crazy?"

"Nope, I ain't crazy. Yep, the old devil's dead and buried; me, I saw him die and I helped bury him. Just the same he wrote me a letter and I just got it last night." He tossed the missive to the table. "Here, Cody, you read it," he said. "Read it right out loud."

Cody caught it up, whipped the letter out of its envelope and stared at it a long minute. He stared from face to face, then back at the letter.

"Here's what it says," he said slowly, "and it's in Early Bill's handwriting."

And he read:

"Dear Cal, you old sinner, me being dead and dug under ground, my old bones sort of feel cramped. I'd sort of like if you'd dig me up, soon as you get this, which I'm writing sitting on top a nice big pink-and-white cloud sort of learning to get the hang of a harp; and I want you to shift me over where I told you. Now get a move on, and me, I'm having me my fun yet.

"So long Cal, gracias, amigo.

"Wm. Cole, alias Early Bill."

Rance Waldron pretended to laugh. The thing of course was some sort of hoax.

"No, it ain't," said Cal soberly. "This letter just come, like I ssy, into Bald Eagle by stage last night. It was sent in another envelope from a feller I'd heard old Early Bill talk about a time or two, a feller that used to be friends with him. I reckon Bill sent it round-about way to get here when he wanted it to." He cleared his throat again and added, "As for him squatting on a cloud twanging a harp, it's a lie, and I'd tell him so; most likely he's shoveling coal down hell-wards. But never mind; I got Porfirio outside, and Gaucho and a couple shovels, and we start doing what the old fool said do. Come ahead."

And Bill Cole Cody very gently put his arm about little Ann Lee and led her away.

Out under the three pines, hushed and wondering and with a touch of awe, at Early Bill's favorite dawn hour men went to work with their shovels. So exclusively were they occupied in what was going forward, none particularly remembered Rance Waldron, who, sneering after his fashion, hands on his hips, stood a few steps withdrawn—none, that is except old Doc Joe who had taken his chance to slip out of the house and follow on, and who now peered from behind the farther of the three pines.

Little Ann Lee, her face very white, her eyes enormous, clutched Aunt Jenifer's arm tight in both hands, and Aunt Jenifer put a comforting arm around her. The sods flew under the strongly wielded shovels; the soil was light and loose; very swiftly the excavation took form, some seven feet long, half as wide, two or three feet deep—

"I'm going to the house," murmured Ann. "I—I can't stand it!"

Cal Roundtree, down in the excavation looked up and said sharply, "You stay right where you are!"

And an instant later he exclaimed triumphantly,

"Here it is!"

He reached down, scratched in the loose soil with both hands and unearthed a small iron box. He tossed it up to them, to Cody and Ann both, and said, "You'll see this one opens with two keys just like the other. You two better open it! Old Early Bill ain't here at all; me and Gaucho moved him the night after he was planted here."

With trembling fingers they did get it open. There were folded papers within. The top one said briefly, "This is my Ace in the Hole, me, I always figured to hold one in any game like this!" Then there was a letter addressed to Ann Lee. There was one for William Cole Cody. There was a lone, sealed envelope, and it was addressed to them together.

And next was a picture, a fine likeness of an old, lean, devil-may-care man with a humorous gleam in his eye. And it was inscribed, "To Ann Lee and Cole Cody from an old friend, Early Bill."

And Ann came close to shrieking out, "Why, I knew him! Aunt Jenny, look! Don't you remember that old man who came to our house, and he was broke and sick and sad-looking, and we took him in and—"

And Cole Cody, a queer catch in his voice, was muttering, "So that's Early Bill, huh? The darned old rascal! I played poker with him; he let me skin him out of his eye teeth; he stuck around and let me stake him; he even asked to borrow money from me—if I'd have known who he was I'd have chased him off the ranch!"

They read their letters hastily; Ann was crying softly and Cody was making rough noises in his throat.

"Open the big envelope," said Cal. "That's Bill's Ace in the Hole."

Again they found a brief note for them both:

"I've had me my fun I reckon. I thought as how, knowing the two of you pups, you might fight a while, then fall in love and get married; I'd like that fine. But maybe things will go some other way, and maybe that darned sneaky varmint name of Rance Waldron might throw a monkey wrench in the machine; I've a hunch he's the bozo hired somebody to shoot me down, him being too foxy and maybe scared. And now here's my third will and, by gravy, my last: And you'll find it leaves everything I've got to you two kids, fight or don't fight, marry or don't marry. And honest, kids, I did have a good time—and I'm still having it right now. So long."

And there was the will!

And there was Doc Joe.

"Grab that Waldron hombre," he shouted. "He's going to hang; and me, I'm going to see that he does."

Waldron whirled. His face went as dead white as Ann's had been. He could have had no thought for that first instant save that he was looking on a dead man, one he himself had murdered. Then he was quick to know he had been tricked, and he was quick to snatch out from his belt a gun that no one had seen, that no one dreamed he had, that no one ever knew where he had come by it. He swung it, murder in his eyes, upon Doc Joe.

Very neatly Porfirio, as watchful as a cat, shot Rance Waldron through the back of the head.

And Bill Cole Cody very gently put his arm about little Ann Lee and led her away, led her clinging to him, back to the patio into which the early sun was just entering.

PETER AND JOHN IN GETHSEMANE

GOLDEN TEXT—Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.—Matthew 26:41.

The morning of that great day when atonement was made for the sins of all the world was nearly at hand. In the darkness of the night, following the institution of the Lord's Supper, and the words and prayer of our Lord (John 15-17), He and His disciples came to the Garden of Gethsemane. Taking three of His disciples He went deeper into the shadows to pour out before the Father His soul, "exceeding sorrowful even unto death."

It is a sacred scene, and we feel a sense of awe and reverence as we approach it, feeling that we too would prefer to tarry outside the garden, did we not feel that we should try to understand a little better what took place that night.

We are especially concerned with Peter and John, who with James shared our Lord's sorrow up to a point, and then so sadly failed Him.

We note that they had a

I. High Privilege (Matt. 26:36-38).

To be asked by Christ to stand by in this crucial hour was to be entrusted with one of the greatest privileges a man could ever know. As there swept over His holy soul a great tidal wave of sorrow unto death, He wanted and needed their fellowship. As Dr. Maclaren puts it, He "grazed the very edge" of human endurance. "Out of the darkness He reaches a hand to feel the grasp of a friend, and piteously asks these humble lovers to stay beside Him; not that they could help Him bear the weight, but that their presence had some solace in it. His agony . . . they could not bear with Him, but they could watch with Him, and that poor comfort is all He asked."

Undoubtedly they intended to do it. Jesus bore witness that their spirit was willing (v. 41), but in spite of that, and all the boasting of Peter at the table that he would never desert Him, they failed Him in His hour of need. It was

II. Sad Weakness (vv. 39-46).

Our Lord's prayer showed great faith in God the Father, the terrific recoil of His soul against being blackened with the burden of sin, and a complete surrender to the Father's will. Here was true denial of self, submission to God, but it was nonetheless an appalling experience for our sinless Lord. So He went back for fellowship with His three trusted friends—and they were asleep.

Jesus recognized that the weakness of the flesh caused them to forget and slumber. We may profit by a little closer scrutiny of the scene. Was it just a physical tiredness? That doubtless entered in, but was not Jesus even more tired than they could possibly be? Was it not rather the weakness of indifference? They did not yet fully believe that their Lord was about to die. That was why they were quickly scattered in unbelief when He did die. This matter was not so serious in their sight, so it was not difficult to yield to the tired body and the deep, quiet darkness, and fall asleep.

We are in much the same position. Danger—grave, spiritual danger—threatens our souls, our families, our nation. We who call ourselves Christians have declared our readiness to stay awake and alert. But we have become at home in this world, the enemy soothes us with the assurance that all is well, time goes on and nothing too serious happens. So, we go to sleep right in the midst of danger, and sleep on even though the Master awakens us again and again.

But now the scene changes. The mob has come to take Christ, and then the sleepy Peter, now much awake, indulges in

III. Foolish Courage (John 18:10-12).

The act of Peter was courageous, even to the point of recklessness. What chance had he against a great armed multitude? It was the natural impulse of a loving heart, but it was misguided and foolish.

What did he think to accomplish—to deliver Jesus from those who would crucify Him? That would have meant no death on the cross and no redemption. The hour for the offering up of the Son of Man as Saviour had come. Peter might have learned that with our Lord in the garden, but then he was asleep. Christ who had hitherto walked right through the crowd of enemies (Luke 4:30), now submitted. In the dark hours of the night He had been prepared to drink this bitter cup (v. 11).

We need to learn from this experience of Peter's lest we make the same mistake. There are all too many in the Church who are asleep as far as its spiritual struggles and opportunities are concerned, who are eager to wield a reckless sword in outward conflict. In their folly and ignorance they do more harm than good, and yet they think they are working for Christ.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

Homemakers May Learn Ration Wisdom Through Study.

This easily prepared gelatin dessert uses all unrationed food. It's pretty but easy to make, and will top off either a light or heavy meal.

These are times when changes are the fashion—and that particularly applies to changes in foods and cooking methods. Mrs. American can no longer dash to the grocer's and get enough canned or processed foods to put together a quick meal. Nor can she get together a meal, even one that would take time, with those rationed foods.

Points must be budgeted far more carefully than dollars and cents in the past! That is the realization every homemaker has been feeling since Ration Book II went into effect. Out of that has srisen one maxim: never to buy a canned or processed food if a fresh one is available.

Confusion, indecision, and slowness in buying were the adjectives grocers used when buying with War Ration Book II began. But this is gradually wearing away as Mrs. America learns new shopping methods.

Since point values change monthly, it's a good idea to keep a list of point values on hand when making the menu. Plan menus for a week at a time—marketing lists and budget lists all on hand when you're doing this important bit of work. Don't go to the store and wander aimlessly, selecting whatever appeals to the eye. Even if you have four or five ration books from which to spend, it's certain you won't get enough out of them by the hit or miss method.

Keep on the lookout for point values which may change—they vary from month to month and sometimes change during the month as the public's buying habits are watched.

Haphazard shopping, meal-planning, and carelessness about the health of the family are out of date. The homemaker must be alert and vigilant now as never before to make of her family the strongest and healthiest possible unit—for a healthy America is a strong America.

Lamb is fairly easily obtainable meat and seeond to pork, richest source of thiamin—our morale vitamin. Very little, if any, lamb is being sent to the armed forces and Allies, and that means it is for civilian use.

Baked Lamb Loaf.
(Serves 8 to 10)
1½ pounds ground lamb
1½ cups bread crumbs
1 cup milk
2 tablespoons minced green pepper
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
3 tablespoons grated onion
1 cup cooked peas
2 teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper

Soak crumbs and mix well with meat and other ingredients. Pack into a loaf pan. Bake in a 300 degree oven for 1½ hours. This may also be baked in a ring mold and served with parsleyed potatoes.

Fish will come into more popularity to help extend our main dishes when ration points will not cover that major item:

Fish Loaf,
(Serves 6)
2 cups cooked, flaked fish (leftover may be used)
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
1 tablespoon minced onion
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 cup fine, soft bread crumbs
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 eggs, separated
½ cup milk
2 teaspoons lemon juice

Shred the fish. Saute green pepper and onion in butter, add to fish with bread crumbs and seasonings. Beat egg yolks; add milk and then add to fish mixture. Stir in lemon juice. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Poured into a greased loaf pan, set in a pan of hot water. Bake for 1 hour in a 350-degree oven. Serve with white sauce to which hard-cooked eggs have been added.

As the days become warmer we will gradually begin adding salads for our main dishes, to help save on pointage. Here is a splendid suggestion, using all unrationed foods:

Deviled Egg, Macaroni and Pea Salad.
(Serves 8)
10 to 12 deviled eggs
1 package (12 to 16-ounce) macaroni
2½ cups cooked, fresh peas
French dressing
Radish roses
Salad greens—optional
Deviled eggs
10 to 12 hard-cooked eggs
2 tablespoons salad dressing
2 tablespoons lemon juice or vinegar
1½ teaspoons mustard
1½ teaspoons worcestershire sauce
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon celery salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

Cut a half-inch slice from rounded end of egg. Cut a saw tooth edge around white, if desired. Remove yolk carefully. Press yolks and bits of leftover whites through sieve, add remaining ingredients and beat until light and fluffy. Refill shells, using pastry tube for decorating top, if desired.

Boil macaroni in salted water according to directions on package. Drain, rinse, then drain thoroughly. Marinate with a little french dressing, then chill.

Cook peas, drain, and save stock for soup. Marinate peas in french dressing.

To make salad, heap macaroni in center of dish. Alternate deviled eggs and radish roses around edge, pressing them into macaroni. Fill with a border of peas between eggs and macaroni.

A main dish salad that's a meal in itself includes macaroni, deviled eggs, and a ring of freshly cooked peas. This supplies a good quantity of protein to build and repair body tissues and gives food with that stick-to-the-ribs quality.

Marmalade Bavarian.
(Serves 6)
1 package orangeflavored gelatin
1¼ cups hot water
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup heavy cream
½ cup orange marmalade

Dissolve gelatin in hot water. Add salt. Chill until cold and syrupy. Fold in cream, whipped only until thick and shiny, but not stiff. Fold in marmalade.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND

by DREW PEARSON

Washington, D. C.

MARTINIQUE APPEASEMENT

How tolerant we have been of the French island of Martinique, for two years thumbing its nose at us within bombing distance of the Panama canal, is illustrated by a conversation which took place between the state department's Sam Reber and treasury department officials.

Reber had gone to Martinique to negotiate with Vichy Admiral Robert regarding the airplane carrier, cruisers and six oil tankers rusting in Martinique waters. Subsequently, the state department announced that an agreement had been reached with Admiral Robert whereby these ships would be turned over to the U. S. A. Months have passed, however, with no result.

After state department envoy Reber returned, treasury officials asked him:

"What about the gold in Martinique? What is to become of that?"

They referred to 25 billions of gold francs still stored in Martinique.

"Oh," replied Reber, "that didn't come up."

"Wasn't it even mentioned?" asked treasury officials, who remembered how France had defaulted on her debts from World War I, still owing us several billion dollars.

"No," replied Reber, "did you think it would be safer up here?"

"Well, it certainly isn't very safe down there," countered the treasury.

"We decided," replied Reber, "that we didn't want to do anything which might infringe on the sovereignty of France."

That ended the matter. The gold is still in Martinique, and Admiral Robert, who apparently isn't much impressed by the subtleties of state department appeasement, has continued to thumb his nose at the United States.

RED CROSS DONOR

Several weeks ago Mrs. Roosevelt phoned the Red Cross to say that she wanted to donate blood to the Washington blood bank, but wanted no publicity.

Red Cross officials agreed and the visit went off without any fanfare. Mrs. Roosevelt merely took her place in line with other blood donors, rolled up her sleeve, bad a pint drawn from her arm, and went on about her business.

Some weeks later, Red Cross officials were astounded to have Mrs. Roosevelt appear at the blood bank again. This time she had not telephoned, but they felt their pledge of no publicity still held good. Once again, the First Lady took her place with other blood donors, and scarcely anyone knew she had been there.

Red Cross officials wished they could have publicized the incident, because they were in the middle of their drive for funds. However, they did not do so, and this column learned of the facts quite by accident.

PAY BEFORE PATRIOTISM

War Production board officials tell of a heavy snow-and-sleet storm that blanketed Seattle and left the Boeing Aircraft plant snowbound, unable to operate for two days. By the end of the week roads had been opened, and Boeing broadcast a back-to-work call.

Men came to the gates of the plant, but stopped there. And they declined to go further until they could be assured of receiving time-and-a-half pay for week-end work.

"But you haven't put in 40 hours this week," officials retorted.

The men stood their ground, however, and Boeing officials telephoned Washington for advice. They talked with Madame Perkins, who ruled that nothing should be allowed to interfere with production and that the men should be paid.

¶ The diplomatic envoys of Honduras, Costa Rica, Salvador, Guatemala, and Nicaragua soon will become ambassadors extraordinary instead of ministers plenipotentiary. This would give all Good Neighbor diplomats the rank of ambassador except Haiti and the Dominican Republic; would also place them ahead of Australia, Canada and New Zealand.

¶ Figures for accidents on the home front continue to be almost as tragic as war casualties. Ned Dearborn of the National Safety Council says that 93,000 Americans were killed and 9,300,000 injured last year.

DO YOUR Good Health

by DR. JAMES W. BARTON

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

GOITER

Perhaps you or one of your family has been found to have the severe type of goiter or Grave's disease, in which there is rapid heart beat, trembling of limbs, failure of eyelids to move together with the eyeball, lack of appetite, and sleeplessness. Your physician may advise operation whereas in a case of the same type of goiter in another patient you know that he has advised X-ray treatment and in another rest and medical treatment.

Dr. Barton

Why should there be three methods of treatment for the same ailment?

One reason is that for the average individual surgery is considered best because the patient can withstand the operation and can be back at his work sometimes within three weeks after operation. I have spoken of a physician friend who before operation had a pulse rate of 110 to the minute, who walked into my office three weeks after operation and I found his pulse rate 72.

Why, then, should treatment by X-ray be given which may take months to get the results obtained by surgery?

There are two reasons. First, some patients naturally object to surgical operations, and second, some patients would not likely withstand operation well.

Treatment by rest and medicine is used in early or mild cases only.

It is not many years ago that patients with Grave's disease traveled hundreds of miles to have a noted surgeon operate for removal of thyroid gland-goiter. Today practically every hospital has one or several surgeons who perform this operation.

Thus the Lahey Clinic, Boston, in Annals of Surgery, reports 19,700 thyroid operations with a death rate less than one in every 100 operations. When we remember that the great majority of these cases are of the severe type of goiter and many may enter hospital in late stages of this disease, it can be seen how "safe" this operation has become.

Dr. Lahey does not advise operation on cases that can be treated by rest and medicine even though operation would bring about a cure in much less time. He points out that as there is no fear of death in the patient's present condition, awaiting the result of rest and medical treatment involves no danger.

Treatment of Stomach Ulcers

Ulcer of the stomach (gastric ulcer) is due to the same causes as duodenal ulcer which is ulcer of the first part of small intestine into which stomach empties the food after the stomach has done its part of digestion. In fact, a duodenanl ulcer can be located just a fraction of an inch from the stomach. Both the stomach ulcer and the intestinal ulcer are called peptic ulcer and are treated in about the same manner by diet, medicine and surgery.

It so happens, however, that while stomach ulcer is not so common as duodenal or intestinal ulcer, unfortunately stomach ulcer turns into cancer more often; about 10 to 20 per cent of stomach ulcers develop into cancers.

In the Post Medical Journal Dr. Rodney Maingot, London, England, states that as far as symptoms are concerned the stomach ulcer cannot be distinguished from an early stomach cancer, therefore, the chances taken with a patient with ulcer of duodenum cannot be taken with a patient with a stomach ulcer. For this reason he suggests that patients with chronic stomach ulcer should enter hospital instead of undergoing home treatment. If by special diet and medical treatment in hospital the ulcer does not heal they should undergo surgical treatment, because early operation saves lives.

The medical treatment of stomach ulcer in hospital is bed rest, test meal examinations, tests for "hidden" blood in stools, complete examination of the blood, examination of stomach by gastroscope which by means of a mirror enables the physician to see the lining of the stomach, the barium X-ray examination. In addition to removing any infection (teeth, tonsils, gall bladder) present, the size, shape and position of the stomach are drawn on a special chart.

Q.—Are pork and oysters healthful food?

A.—Pork is a good food, rich in fat. Too much can upset liver and gall bladder. Oysters are a good food, also rich in fat.

In Riding a Bicycle, We Balance With Our Ears

The transportation restrictions have sent many thousands of people back to the bicycle. Some of us had not ridden a bicycle for years, but the art of balancing on two wheels came back to us easily enough.

Now, why don't we fall over? The tires on the bicycle are a semi-circular pattern, you will have noticed, and when you come to think about it they do look pretty precarious. In fact, it is obvious that you are going to hold them up, not they hold you.

The truth is that we balance our bicycles with our ears. It is all part of our normal make-up, this balancing act, and we commence putting it into operation as soon as we begin to walk.

The ear is divided into three parts: the outer ear, the middle ear, and the inner ear. Our balancing mechanism is contained in the inner ear. There we have two tiny canals filled with liquid. We might almost call them "fluid levels," for they function in much the same way. When the liquid is moved by the sway of the head it touches tiny hairs which convey to the brain the message that we are overbalancing.

Do you know the new regulations on packages sent to men in the service? Here they are: You can send packages to soldiers anywhere in the U. S., although there are now Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men; and you can send packages to men in the Navy, Coast Guard, and Marines, wherever they are. And when you send that package from home, remember—the gift men in the service always appreciate is cigarettes. And the favorite with men in the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and Marines is Camel (based on actual sales records in Post Exchanges and Canteens). So stop in at your local dealer today—and mail him a carton of Camels.—Adv.

All From Wood

Wood is known in Germany today as "universalrohstoff"—the material of which anything can be made. German soldiers are clad in fabrics produced from wood. They eat yeast, molasses, and sugar made from wood; also cheese and beef from wood-fed cattle.

German soldiers move to Russian battle lines in wood-gas-driven trucks which are greased with tree-stump lubricants and employ Buna tires made from wood alcohol.

Pay of Captives

When an American soldier is captured, his pay is continued and the accumulated amount given to him upon his return, minus such deductions as insurance premiums and allotments made to dependents. When a man is reported missing in action and his fate is unknown, he remains on a pay status for at least a year.

ON THE HOME FRONT

With RUTH WYETH SPEARS

YOUR tape measure and a little figuring can help you save material when making those new slip covers. In estimating goods remember that the length and width of each section must be the same as the widest and longest measurement of the part of the chair to which it is to be fitted plus seams, seat tuck-in and flounce fullness. The method of measuring is shown here.

Slip cover material usually comes in 36 and 50-inch widths. Frequently a narrow chair back may be covered by splitting a 50-inch width of goods. For other chairs 36-inch material might be cut to better advantage. If the material has a large figure an extra yard will be needed for matching and centering the design. Decide in advance which seams are to be accented with welting or trimming and measure them to determine the amount needed.

NOTE—Do the springs in your chairs need fixing? Mrs. Spears' new BOOK 9 gives illustrated directions for doing this. This book also contains more than 30 other thrift ideas for keeping your home attractive in wartime. Copies of BOOK 9 are available at 15 cents each. Address:

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

War workers cars are being checked in company parking lots by at least one manufacturer to make certain that tires are kept in serviceable condition. If the worker fails to have his tires recapped in time he is denied further application either for tires or recaps.

It takes three to eleven times normal distance to stop on snow or ice without tire chains, and you can't negotiate slippery hills with bare tires that spin on packed snow, waste gas and wear tires.

Each tapper on a rubber plantation is responsible for about 300 trees, which in one day's tapping will not on average of 50 pounds of latex, equal to about 17 pounds of dry rubber.

Automotive conservation authorities in New Hampshire boast of the reduction of that state's tire needs by 877 just as an example of what can be done in saving rubber now on motor vehicles.

First Week of Second War Loan Drive Nets $119,081.55 Individual Subsctiptions, From 186 People

The first week of the Second War Loan drive ending April 17th shows that 186 people subscribed for $119,081.25 in cash in Boone County on the quota of $474,000.00 assigned to individuals. Banks' subscriptions of $183,000.00 does not count on this quota of $474,000.00 which individuals, non-banking corporations and firms are expected to take. This is not a very good showing for the first week of the drive when it must be understood that several large subscriptions are included in this total. Some workers are discouraged and report that on roads of several miles in length not a single bond is being purchased. This indeed is a very bad situation when their neighbor boys are on foreign soil fighting for those of us who are at home and going ahead with our business.

Unless we lend our money and credit to our Government there is but one way to get it and that is by taxation on every thing we own and upon every thing we buy and sell, leaving all of us but a bare living and without profit in our business. Many sons of farmers have been deferred to work upon farms thereby escaping the dangers of war which their neighbor's son are facing on the battle fronts, and our Government has the right to expect heavy bond subscriptions from these sources, as well as from those whose sons and relatives are in the service. Those of us who have no relatives in the service or on the farms should feel it a privilege to subscribe to our very limit to help those who are helping us. The banks offer an easy way to help you do your duty where you do not have the ready cash. Go to your banker and talk with him and he will help you with your subscription.

This $474,000.00 must be raised. We can not ask other counties to subscribe for us. Many counties have already reported their quota's raised. One Kentucky County overscribed its quota ten times. Boone County is one of the prosperous counties of the State and we are expected to do our part along with other counties of this Nation.

If you expect to subscribe to help these soldier boys, please do so before April 24th, as the last few days of the drive to the 30th is to be given over to special work of the solicitors and in special cases. Don't subscribe for $18.75 when you should subscribe for $1000.00. Our soldiers do not go half way in battle. They go the limit. Will you not do likewise? This war is the cause of all farm products and wages being double to what they would be if there was no war. Is it not fair to expect that a large portion of this excess income be placed in War Bonds? Ten percent of our income is not sufficient to finance this war. It takes more like 50% of our income to be invested in War Bonds. There is no better security on earth than a United States Government Bond. Our homes, our farms, our business are pledged to the repayment of these bonds. A Government Bond is a lien on every thing we own and is ahead of any mortgage on your property. Should you need your money at any time after sixty days from date of purchase, the government will refund the cash to you for your bond within two or three days after presenting your bond for payment if your investment is Series, E. F. or G. If your investment is a 2% or 2½% bond you can sell it in the general market, which market now is above par, thereby returning to you small margin of profit and we are assured by all financial experts that these general market bonds will not be permitted to go below par for the duration of the war at least as there is so much money seeking investment. Full Steam Ahead This Week to reach our Goal of $474,000.00 individual subscriptions.

FREEDOM'S SEARCHLIGHT

Since history's first recorded page,
All o'er this world, through every age,
No boon so great as liberty
Has every blessed humanity.

All human beings on this earth
Have had the right since day of birth
To live their lives in freedom's light
Entirely free from rule of might.

No king e'er ruled by right divine.
No royal blood surpasses thine.
To worship God as each thinks right,
Has been His law since dawn of light.

Conditions 'round each child at birth
Are not the same throughout this earth,
But every baby born alive
Has equal rights to hope and strive.

All will not tread the self-same way,
For some must lead and some obey.
A few will reach the topmost round,
But most near bottom will be found.

For centuries long, it was maintained,
By kings and lords and those who reigned,
That God selected as his tool,
A chosen few with right to rule.

But these beliefs no longer 'bide,
In "Seventy-six" they were denied,
And "Rights of Men" to all proclaimed,
In "Declaration" now world famed.

Our "Independence" thus proclaimed
In "Declaration" proudly named,
Since then, has been a beacon light
To lead all nations toward the right.

For 'tis not arms nor wealth of state,
That makes a nation truly great,
But only those who think aright
Can onward, forward, upward fight.

These simple truths, yet grand indeed,
Our fathers wisely made the "seed"
Of first republic on this earth,
And "Our Free Country" had its birth.

Its rapid growth from time of birth,
To greatest nation now on Earth,
Should prove to all humanity
The merits, true, of liberty.

"United States", Oh name sublime!
May thy ideals endure with time,
And all thy deeds be those of right
Lead thou, the world with freedom's light.

Drive thou, from Earth, autocracy.
Supplant instead, democracy
In every nation great and small,
With equal rights for one and all.

'Till every person on this earth,
Regardless of his rank at birth,
May strive and someday hope to be
A leader 'midst humanity.

'Tis sad but true that freedom's price
Is paid with war's dread sacrifice.
For liberties we know today,
Our fathers fought long years to pay.

Ambitious rulers once believed
That "World Empire" could be achieved,
And helpless millions have been slain,
In wars of conquest waged in vain.

But history proves to those who read
That "World Empire" cannot succeed,
For every time attempt is made
The price of freedom will be paid.

Yet one ambitious crazy fool,
In quest of world domain and rule,
Launched brutal war 'gainst liberty
That challenged all humanity.

With preparation long and wide,
With "might" not "right" upon his side,
With scorn, all treaties, he disdained,
And ruthless war 'gainst all maintained.

With aeroplanes and submarines
And mechanized dread war machines,
The murder and destruction wrought
Surpass all bounds of human thought.

With flags of war and death unfurled,
Dictators now rule half the world.
The other half, as yet, is free,
And we must hold this liberty.

'Tis not enough that half be free,
But all must know true liberty.
Dictators must, from earth, be driven
And their world plans asunder riven.

These truths convinced our people brave,
That if their liberties, they'd save,
They too, must join this dreadful fray,
And price of freedom help to pay.

Americans, already free,
Now fight for others' liberty,
And in this struggle for the right,
May victory crown our noble fight.

Now as we turn our "searchlight" rays,
And at our future status gaze,
We cannot know its fate nor scope,
But we must trust and fondly hope—

That time's great onward rolling tide,
Will soon make liberty "world-wide",
And bind all men in lasting peace,
And strifes and wars forever cease.

Local Fruit Crop Injured By Freeze

Prospects for a good peach crop were destroyed by the freezing weather the past week when temperatures dropped to between 22 and 26 degrees according to reports of growers given the County Agent's Office. Frank McGlasson & Sons, C. Liston Hempfling, and Charles L. Hempfling, large commercial peach growers in the county, had excellent prospects for a crop previous to the freezing weather. A few peaches of certain varieties may come through but the main crop was destroyed. Sweet cherries and certain varieties of plums were also injured.

Most growers think we still have good prospects for an apple crop and for sour cherries.

Apparently the tobacco plants came through in fair shape. Pasture and small grains were injured but the rains early this week were hastening the recovery of these crops.

Contour Cultivation Helps Check Erosion

More plowing of land, due to war demands for food and feed, may mean extra losses of soil, unless efforts are made to control erosion, says a statement of Prof. George Roberts of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station.

"It is more imperative now than ever before to control erosion," says Prof. Roberts. "More land than usual will be plowed for crops to meet the war demands and sloping land will be plowed up that ordinarily would be left in grass.

"All plowing, seeding, and tillage should be done on the contour—that is, at right angles to the slope—so that the furrows produced by tillage will catch and hold much water that would run off if the tillage were done with the slope. There are two big advantages in contour cultivation; one is that more water enters the soil; and the other is that it prevents a great deal of erosion as compared with cultivating with the slope.

"Conserving of moisture may mean much in crop yields in critical dry spells. No farmer can afford to take any chances of lowering yields at this time.

"In normal times the loss of soil by erosion that can be prevented is inexcusable. How much more so now!

"A very bad practice is to smooth sloping land by dragging or rolling and not plant it before a rain falls upon it. Only as much land should be so treated as can be planted before a rain. Immediately after planting on the contour, the land should be cultivated with an implement that will leave the land in small furrows to hold the rainfall and increase the intake of water. For the same reason, row crops planted on the contour should be cultivated after each rain.

"Seed cover crops on all cultivated land early enough to get as good growth as possible before winter. Seed on the contour.

"When the farmer does these things, he serves both his country and himself. "Let your contour cultivation help win the war."

Farmers Should Grow Hybrid Corn

Farmers should grow adapted hybrid corn this year because it increases the total bushels of feed, requires less labor per bushel produced and is more sure of a crop than open pollinated varieties according to the county agent's office.

Only hybrids should be used and there have been many unadapted hybrids used in the county that have given unsatisfactory yields.

U. S. 13 remains the most used and leading yellow hybrid in popularity. It is a soft, early maturing hybrid.

Kentucky 103 is the next most popular variety. It is between U. S. 13 and Kentucky 102 is late maturing, tall growing and hardness of kernels.

Kentucky 102 is a late maturing tall growing variety that is a favorite for silage and in the over flow river bottom sections where its height keeps it above the weeds.

Among the white hybrid Kentucky 69 is the oldest variety. Kentucky 72B is one of the newer yielding hybrids and Kentucky 203 is becoming quite popular over a wide area.

Hybrid seed of the desired varieties or crosses may be difficult to get just when wanted. Farmers who have not gotten their seed should do so immediately.

New Jap Activity in Australian Sector Threatens Entire Allied Pacific Front; United Nations Mastery of Air, Sea Brings African Campaign to Climax

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.) Released by Western Newspaper Union.

General Montgomery, leader of the victorious British Eighth army, inspects the weapons native to some of the fiercest fighters in his army. The men are Gurkhas from India. The weapon, the curving khukri which has been used effectively in hand-to-hand clashes. The weapon may never be unsheathed without blood being drawn.

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
Something in the Air

Indicative of an impending large scale move, in line with warnings of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Japanese airmen continued their bombing campaign against Allied Southwest Pacific strongholds in the New Guinea area.

One hundred Jap planes attacked the important Allied supply base of Port Moresby, with 50 bombers protected by an equal number of fighters. Allied airmen arose to challenge the enemy and they were aided by heavy anti-aircraft fire.

In all, 37 Jap planes fell in flames, 29 in dog-fights and eight from accurate ack-ack.

Jap losses at Port Moresby raised to 76 the number of planes lost in two days.

Coming from down under, Australian Minister for External Affairs Dr. Herbert Evatt has come up with a plea for increased help to Allied forces in the Southwest Pacific.

Dr. Evatt's plea coincided with a warning from the Allies' two top Southwest Pacific commanders, Gen. Douglas MacArthur and Lieutenant General Blamey, that the Japs were massing planes and men north of Australia. General MacArthur said the enemy was seeking to re-establish his air superiority while Lieut. Gen. Blamey warned that the Japs had concentrated 200,000 men to capitalize on aerial advantage.

RUSSIA:
Lull Before Storm

The lull continued before the storm in Russia.

Both sides reported minor action. The Reds claimed to have thrown back small wave of German infantry that tried to run over Russian positions on the Volkhov river southeast of Leningrad.

The Reds also announced that artillery and machine gun fire was concentrated on German positions before Smolensk as part of a plan to reduce the outer defenses of the Nazi bastion.

For themselves, the Germans reported continued secondary action along the west bank of the Donets river below Kharkov. Here, they said, artillery fire raked the entrenched Russian forces. Neither side claimed major advances.

RUML PLAN:
Doughton Unforgiving

Pay-as-you-go but no forgiveness on taxes!

Doughty old Robert Doughton stood up in the house and told members pressing for reconsideration of the Ruml plan that his Ways and Means committee favored deducting 20 per cent from weekly payrolls but letting the question of forgiving any taxes go till study of a new tax bill.

Although backed by leaders of the majority party, Doughton failed to still opposition. Representative Joseph Martin served notice he would continue efforts to bring the Ruml plan back to the floor for further discussion.

With no tax forgiveness, the 20 per cent payroll deduction undoubtedly would apply to current taxes, with remaining payments on 1942 taxes being additional.

TUNISIA:
'Fox' in Corner

Ending one of the longest retreats in military history, Marshal Rommel's Axis Africa Korps hammered in its stakes in the triangular defense zone of northeastern Tunisia.

All around, Allied forces under supreme command of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower drew up for the final phase of the battle of North Africa. To the west stood the British First army; to the southwest, mixed Allied forces of French and American, and to the south the redoubtable British Eighth army, which had chased Rommel all the way in from Egypt.

Allied leaders estimated that the Axis had 210,000 men in the triangle, although reports reaching London from Switzerland stated that Italian troops were being pulled out of the box and sent to Sicily. Against this force the Allied leaders had almost a million men to hurl, besides enjoying numerical superiority in the air.

Jagged ridges and gulches distinguish the position Rommel has chosen for a last stand.

DRAFT:
You'll Be in the Army

With few exceptions, all physically able men between 18 and 37 years of age will be in the army by 1944!

So says Paul V. McNutt, War Manpower Commissioner, within whose office falls the National Selective Service board. Several months ago, McNutt announced that only employment in essential industry, and not dependency, would be basis for deferment.

Now, the Selective Service board has made it official. Heads of homes, childless married men, and married men with children will be called up for service unless they work in jobs deemed essential to the war effort. Exceptions will be made only if induction threatens to work hardship on a wife, child or parent.

To help solve the farm labor problem, broad exemption was given agricultural workers. The 2-C class will defer men engaged in farm labor while 3-C will exempt men with dependents in agriculture.

RECIPROCAL TRADE:
Show Me Mean Business

Under fire of congressmen who expressed fear that the administration's reciprocal trade treaties tend toward a reduction in American living standards, Secretary of State Cordell Hull urged their renewal as a sign that the United States will promote a free development of commerce after the war.

Furthermore, Hull declared, renewal of the reciprocal trade treaties will place American industry in a position to bid for world trade after peace has closed many factories now working at capacity.

Under the present Reciprocal Trade act which expires June 12, the President is allowed to enter into agreements with foreign countries calling for mutual reductions in tariffs on different commodities for periods of three years. Opponents of the act would limit the life of these pacts to less than three years.

United Nations' Parleys First Real Solidarity Test

Russia Seen as Vital Factor in World Organization; Mutual Understanding Essential to Worth-While Peace.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

This month will witness the first test of how united the United Nations are. The first of the conferences of representatives of the countries allied against the Axis are to meet and discuss food. On the success of that gathering, much will depend.

It may be just as well that the governments linked together under the very general and very idealistic statement of principles, the Atlantic Charter, are going to begin with a very material, a very down-to-earth and likewise a very vital question—food.

It would be too much to expect to begin at once to discuss the abstract subjects which are bound to arise when the larger implications of the philosophy of government are considered. People have to eat to live.

It seems reasonable to believe that the food question can be bandied. Of course, it can easily be disposed of if the United States simply agrees to continue a lend-lease operation indefinitely with no demand for remuneration except vague promises. That, of course, is what the cynical say will happen.

And that brings me to the crux of the whole question of America's role in world affairs. If we go on the assumption as the isolationists do, that heads you win, tails we lose, and that America is going to be played for a sucker, we might as well throw up the whole idea of international co-operation now and put our heads back into the sand until the next Pearl Harbor.

On the other hand, the sincere proponents of international co-operation believe that America is smart enough and strong enough and wise enough and unselfish enough to help build the machinery which will at least make the world's wheels go around a little better than they have so far. We created a United States out of country with every geographical and political factor that exists anywhere. We welded into one a conglomerate people representing every race on the face of the globe.

Difficulties Ahead

However, it is only fair to look at some of the difficulties ahead.

Russia, if not an obstacle, is at least a problem for several reasons. With an Allied victory, Russia, both because of her contribution to the victory and because of her size, position and strength, is a vital factor in any world organization—or disorganization. She is not actually a member of the United Nations but rather an associated power as the United States was in the last war. She has not made a clear statement of her war or peace aims.

She is, at present, occupying territory of what was once free and independent nations; a part of Finland, all of the Baltic states, a part of Poland.

Recently, Gardner Cowles, presumably speaking as a member of the Office of War Information, said:

"If Americans don't make an effort to understand Russia and the Russian place in the scheme of things to follow this war, I fail to see how we can possibly hope to build a worth-while peace."

That, of course, is true. However, that is only half of the story. It is mutual understanding that is necessary. Mr. Cowles might have said:

"If the Russian government does not encourage the people to understand America, we can't build a worth-while peace."

It is a two-handed jug.

We do misunderstand much about Russia. We are misinformed on some points. The Russian government has failed to inform us on others. For instance, few people in this country know and many are probably unwilling to believe what Cowles, who ought to know what he is talking about, says about private property under the Soviets.

About Property

"Workers may acquire any amount of consumer goods," he tells us, "any amount of furniture, an auto, etc., for their own use. The distinction from our economy is that in Russia, an individual may not own income-producing property."

Well, what of it. California never threatened to secede because of New England's blue laws or New York state because of the way they turn out divorces in Nevada.

The important thing is, what are Russia's intentions concerning other nations? On my desk, there is beginning to accumulate the literature of the various little nations—Poland, Latvia, Finland, who are already starting to plead for the restoration of lost territory or sovereignty.

Anti-Communistic feeling is strong in America. You will bear tales of how Stalin expects to make a deal with Germany, how he expects to turn France communist the moment the country is freed from Germany. You will also hear the assurances of people like Mr. Cowles who say: "Stalin no longer feels that the survival and development of the Soviets depend on world revolution." That Russia wants to be allowed to go her own way, to work out her own salvation and once she has assurance that a combination of other nations will not arise against her, she will be only too content to live and let live.

I was talking with a seasoned and pretty cynical observer who has seen the seamy side of foreign relations at close range for many years. He is suspicious of Russia, equally suspicious of Britain. But even he said to me:

"Before we talk too much about the obstacles in the way of an international understanding, let's find out what the British and Russian and other statesmen really want."

The Goal

That is all the gentlemen in the senate are asking, who are working so arduously to obtain the passage of the Ball resolution which would put the United States government on record as favoring the creation of an international organization to keep the peace, of assuring United States' co-operation in policing the world against any aggressor.

There were few people who, when this United Nation was born, believed that it could live. It did. Norman Angell, in that exceedingly cogent book of his, "Let the People Know," concludes one chapter with these words:

"In the old days, we felt impelled to burn a man alive if he did not attend our church. Never, men were sure, could those of the true faith live at peace with heretics. But they found that men of different faiths could live together; that they could keep their differences, yet be loyal to each other in the achievement of their common purposes. Religion is not less than nationalism. What is possible in the one field is possible in the other."

Whether we agree with Mr. Angell or not, there seems to be no sensible reason why we shouldn't try to find out if he is right. Peace is worth the effort.

Broadcaster's Diary

The other day, I received a letter that shows that commentators are of some practical use in the world after all. It was from a lady from Long Beach, Calif., who wrote:

"I wanted to phone for a plumber one day last week. Each time I tried to use the phone, two women were talking (about nothing) on the '3-party' line. I tried every five minutes for nearly half an hour, never saying anything, only picking up the phone and having to hang up again.

"One of the times, I heard one of them say 'some woman wants the line but I pay for it just as much as she does!' You, Mr. Baukhage, were just about to finish your regular broadcast," my writer goes on, "and some imp of mischief from my youth returned to my 50-year-old heart as I suddenly connected that remark with the closing words of your program. You had about two minutes yet to go, so I hurriedly plugged my portable garden radio into the electric socket which is near the phone table and just at the right moment lifted the receiver off the phone. Yes . . . they were still talking . . . so —just as you said: 'That's all, and thanks very much,' I put the phone mouthpiece right next to the radio—snapping the latter off at the right second. Then, I listened on the phone and heard one woman say in an actually meek voice, 'I guess we have talked pretty long. See you later. Good-bye.'

"After I stopped laughing, I called the plumber but you helped me, so I do think you deserve to be thanked. Also for a real laugh."

French farmers have been ordered to plant grain on the same number of acres they had under cultivation in 1937-1938 or pay a fine.

A plan is being discussed in Latin America to make President Roosevelt "an honorary citizen of the Americas" in "recognition of his tremendous activity in favor of the salvation of America and humanity."

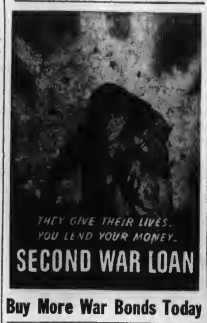
The Japanese government has advised the International Red Cross that it distributed 230,000 letters from home to American and United Nations prisoners of war in 1942. Five thousand four hundred letters were delivered to prisoners in the Philippines; 7,500 to Shanghai; 21,500 to Hong Kong, 600 to other parts of China; 4,500 to Zentsuji, and 800 to other parts of Japan.

Only Hand-Pole Fishing in "Navigable" Streams Permitted In Kentucky During The Month Of May.

Frankfort, Ky., April—All public waters in Kentucky will be closed to fishing during the month of May, with the exception of those "navigable streams" under government lock and dam where pole and line fishing will be permitted, S. A. Wakefield, Director of the Division of Game and Fish, announced today.

Rumors have been flying thick and fast during the past few days that the ban on May fishing would be lifted this year due to the war but Wakefield said that would not be possible.

Among the "Navigable" streams in the state are the Kentucky; Ohio; Green; and its two tributaries—Barren and Rough; Cumberland; Tennessee; Big Sandy, and its two tributaries—the Levisa Fork and Tug Fork. The Four tributaries that are mentioned above are open to fishing below the locks and dams that have been placed some distance from where they flow into the larger streams.



The Game and Fish law States: "It shall be unlawful to take fish or attempt to take fish in any manner or by any means in any of the public waters of this state during the month of May each year, except that this shall not prohibit fishing with pole and line in any navigable streams but not above the last lock and dam." The locks and dams in each stream are numbered, starting near the mouth and going on up to the last lock and dam up the river.

Using the Kentucky River for example: The No. 1 lock is located at Carrollton, Ky. at the mouth of the Kentucky river where it enters the Ohio River. The locks are numbered consecutively up to Lock No. 14, which is located at Heidelberg, Ky. This is the last lock and dam on the Kentucky river and under the Game and Fish Code, it will be unlawful to take fish in any manner above that lock and dam during the month of May. Fishing with pole and line will be permitted in all the above mentioned streams during the month of May below the upper lock and dam. Remember this: The last lock and dam will always be found toward the headwaters of any river.

Angling with pole and line will also be permitted in ponds during the month of May but any persons over sixteen years of age, man or woman, must possess a fishing license in order to take fish from such a body of water unless he or she owns land or is a tenant on land upon which the pond is located, Wakefield pointed out.

Rough Fish To Be Removed From Herrington Lake.

Frankfort, Ky., April — The Division of Game and Fish has completed arrangements whereby the Fulton Fish Market of Louisville, Ky., under the supervision of the Division, will remove all gar, carp and buffalo fish from Herrington Lake in the immediate future, S. A. Wakefield, Director of the Division, announced today.

The Division has a two-fold purpose for doing this and they are:

First, the species of fish mentioned above, have become so numerous as to be detrimental to to desirable species such as newlights, black bass, white bass, walleyes and channel catfish.

Second, the Division wishes to make these rough species of fish available for food during the war emergency at a time when our domestic meats are falling short of demands.

Closed Season on Pond, Bull or Jumbo Frogs From April 15—June 15.

Frankfort, Ky., April—The season closed on pond, bull or jumbo frogs on April 15 and will continue closed until June 15, S. A. Wakefield, Director of the Division of Game and Fish, announced today.

Any person caught taking frogs in any manner during that closed period will be arrested and prosecuted, Wakefield stated.

A closed season or protective period was placed on frogs to give them an oppirtunity to reproduce and to increase their populations. Wholesale gigging with no regard to bag limit, size, or season or year resulted in enactment of a law which places a closed season on the frogs and a bag limit of 15 frogs per day.

The goal of the Second War Loan drive is 13 billion dollars. That is just about one fifth of the estimated increase of the Public Debt for the fiscal year of 1943.

Strange!
But the Jap's the Prisoner

This fine, young American was formerly employed by the L & N at Louisville, Kentucky . . . volunteered in 1941 . . . fought at Bataan . . . was captured by the Japanese.

Temporarily, a Little Jap with a Big Gun holds him in a concentration camp.

Physically confined? Yes! But his soul is free and his American Spirit soars back across the seas to his beloved homeland where . . .

men speak, live, plan, work, play and pray as they choose;
every person is master of his fate;
life and property are protected by law;
children laugh and grow up in freedom to reach high places in government or industry according to their merit.

Yes, the Jap's the real prisoner. He has never known the joys of individual freedom. His lot is to serve a master blindly. He has never known the glorious privilege of living under laws that he has had a part in making. He has never seen Free Men and Free Enterprise build a wonderful country like America where the comforts of the ordinary man are beyond his fondest dreams.

Ours is a great Country, made so under our form of government, by Free Men, by Free Enterprise. That's what we are fighting to preserve.

PRESIDENT
LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD

The immediate purpose of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and employees is to help win the war. This done, its energies will be again directed to the South's all-around development in which it has already played an important part. Despite much misunderstanding of the complicated freight rate structure, the average rates on actual movement from the South to the North are as low as, or lower than, from the North to the South. To encourage the free movement of goods manufactured in the South to consuming centers in the North and East, Southern railroads make rates necessary to accomplish that purpose.

CONTROL CAN DO WHAT PROHIBITION CAN'T!

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"I've been meanin' to ask you for the last couple of weeks, Judge, what you think of this prohibition talk that keeps croppin' up every so often."

"I've heard some of it too, Henry, and I feel like this about it...

"It comes from a comparatively small group of reformers . . . the same type that plunged us into prohibition during the last war. And, as we all remember, into nearly 14 years of the worst crime and gangsterism this country has ever known. Everybody had all the liquor they wanted only it came from bootleggers at exorbitant prices and the government was deprived of millions and millions of dollars in taxes.

"It seems to me, as I told my Congressman down in Washington last week, that we've got all we can do here at home to help win this war without wasting time arguing about things we know, from sad experience, won't work."

"TOWN AND FARM IN WARTIME"

A weekly news digest from the Rural Press Section of the OWI News Section.

Meat Ceiling Postponed

Maximum prices in beef, veal, lamb, and mutton sold at retail will not become effective until May 17. OPA suspended ceilings sheduled to go into effect April 15 in order to be sure that the prices were in line with other living costs.

Raise Corn Prices

A ceiling price five cents per bushel higher than present maximums established April 14, will be effective until September 30, 1943. According to OPA, which acted upon instructions from stabilization director Byrnes and food administrator Davis, there will be no further increases in corn prices during the 1943 market season The price raise is designed to relieave the present acute market shortage of corn for livestock feeding and industrial processing.

New Rules On Selective Service

Chief effect of the recent changes in Selective Service classifications is the elimination of dependency deferment except for; (1) Those who maintain bona fide homes with children, (2) Those whose induction would cause extreme hardship to a wife, child or parent, and (3) Those with dependents who are necessary to and regularly engaged in Agriculture.

Men formerly classified in III-A and III-B who had been deferred because of dependents will be reconsidred. Class III-B is eliminated entirely. A child born after September 14, 1942, is not recognized as a "dependent" in classifying a registrant in Class III-A. The new classification, III-D, will contain all men whose induction, in the opinion of their local boards, would create extreme hardship or privation for a dependent wife, child, or parent.

War Costs Go Higher

A new high of more than 7 billion dollars was reached in war expenditures during March, when the average amount spent each day was $263,400,00. To meet these mounting costs of war, secretary of the treasury Morgenthau recently disclosed that the 13 billion dollar Second War Loan is part of 70 billion dollars that must be raised during 1943. "This is a people's war, so all the people ought to have a part in financing it," said the secretary as he warned that "ten per cent is not enough".

Farmers Who Sell To Retailers

A farmer who sells butter, lard, or any other rationed food to a retailer must collect ration points for the sale, just as he has done in selling to consumers since March 29, according to OPA. All farm sales must be made at current point values and stamps collected must be turned in to local ration boards with a report made on OPA form R-1609. This form will be available to all local boards during the last week in April. The first report is due during the first fifteen days of May and will cover sales made betwen March 29 and the end of April.

Women's Land Army

A women's land army of about 60,000 city and town women will be recruited, as a part of the U. S. Crop Corps, to help meet the farm labor shortage. Ten thousand of these women are expected to enroll for year-round farm work and about 50,000 for seasonal work for one month or more. Three hundred thousand women will be placed by country agricultural agents for short-time emergency jobs on farms—women who can spare week-ends, a few days, or a few weeks, women who wish to contribute their services should await the local call.

Fertilizer For Corn Crops

Farmers may obtain chemical fertilizer containing nitrogen for use on field corn in the corn belt states of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, in acordance with a directive of the War Food Administration. Restrictions on deliveries of fertilizer for use on corn field expired April 1. Chief provisions of the directive are; (1) Applications for fertilizer for use on Group A crops must be accepted first, (2) All eligible applicants must have received at least 50 per cent of their requirements before any applicant can receive more; (3) Deliveries above 50 per cent shall be made in equal percentage to all eligible persons, (4) As high a percentage of this fertilizer shall be made available for other Group B crops as for corn.

Sugar For Canning

Sugar for home-canning of 1943 fruit crops will be available to housewives on approximately the same basis as last season. No reduction of blue point stamps will be made from War Ration Book Two for canning sugar. Details of the program will be issued within the next few days.

Farm Values Up

Farm real estate values on March 1, 1943, showed an increase of nine per cent over last year, the U. S. Department of Agriculture has announced. This is the most substantial gain that has occurred since 1920. Land value increases during the past year were widespread, with some advance reported for each of the 48 states.

Ceiling On Fresh Vegetables

Retail ceiling for cabbage, carrots, lettuce, peas, snap beans, spinach, and tomatoes will be established beginning April 22nd through the use of uniform mark-ups over the retailer's net cost, according to OPA. For each vegetable except cabbage, the retailer will determine his ceiling by multiplying his net cost by 1.39. On cabbage, where spoilage is greater, the mark-up is 1.65 for independent retailers having an annual volume of $250,000 or less, 1.54 for chain retailers with an annual volume under $250,000, and 1.50 for any retailer with an annual volume over $250,000. Retailers will determine their ceiling each Thursday by applying given mark-ups to the net cost of the vegetable based on the largest single purchase of the preceding week.

Exempt Small Sales By Farmers

A farmer who sells not more than $75 worth of food per month to country shippers or to consumers is exempt from price control recently established for seven fresh vegetables. If the farmer is a country shipper, he is subject to the price regulations.

Higher Support Prices

Support prices for dry beans, dry peas, peanuts, soybeans, and flaxseed, have been raised, according to the War Food Administration. Payments have also been announced for Irish potatoes and truck crops for production between 90 per cent and 110 per cent of farm goals.

Point Values Lowered

Because some perishable meat products were moving very slowly, OPA reduced by one or two points the ration values of sausage (including weiners, bologna, pork sausage), scrapple, chitterlings, and pork necks and backbones. Dry and semidry sausages—such as hard salami, hard cervelat, pepperoni, soft salami, thuringer, and mortadella—were not effected by the action.

SUGAR CREEK

The Death Angle came into our midst on Thursday, April 15th and took away one of our most lowed citizens, Mrs. Hannah Edwards. Had she lived until June 10, 1943 she would have been 84 years of age. She was a lifelong resident of Gallatin County and Sugar Creek; a member of the Paint Lick Baptist church. Her husband, Houston Edwards having preceded her in death in the early years of their married life. She leaves to mourn her passing, one daughter Myrtle, and a number of neices and nephews, and a host of friends.

Mrs. Edwards was known by most of her friends at "Aunt Hannah," and many will be the rememberances of her kindness and her jolly philosophys and interesting stories of Sugar Creek as it was years ago.

Funeral Services were conducted at the Paint Lick Church at 2:00 P. M. Saturday with burial in the church cemetery. Reverends I. E. Stephenson, of Glencoe, Herbert Tinsley of Warsaw, J. E. Ashcraft of Paint Lick and Ben Russell of Covington, Ky., gave beautiful prayers of consolation, and conducted the services.

Wallace Grubbs, funeral director of Walton and nephew of the deceased was in charge of arrangements.

Miss Myrtle, who is well known throughout surrounding communities because of her years of service as school teacher has the sympathy of all her many friends.

A. J Sisson spent Saturday night with his brother, T. V. Sisson of Covington.

Miss Frances Adams of Warsaw was the supper guest of Miss Roberta Clifton Saturday.

George William Alexander and Gilford Blackburn of Ellison called on Misses Roberta Clifton and Fayetta Miskell Sunday evening.

Miss Myrtle Edwards still remains very ill, but is being capably cared for by her kind neighbors.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wallick entertained as their guest Wednesday her brother, Jim Hopkins and daughter of Mays Lick, Ky.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mays of Cincinnati, Ohio were the weekend guest of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Wallick.

We wish to express sympathy to the bereaved relatives of Mrs. Hattie Hamilton.

WITH THE REDS

Cincinnati:—The first ladies' day of the season is scheduled at Crosley Field Saturday, with the champions of the world, the St. Louis Cardinals, battling the Reds in a game that will start at 2:30. The Cardinals also will meet the Reds at Crosley Field Sunday, starting at 2:30 whereupon the Reds will pack their baggage and head for Pittsburg, where they will help the Corsairs open their season Tuesday.

Three games will be played between the Reds and Pirates, then the Reds will invade St. Louis for three more games against the Cardinals. A single game will be played Saturday, May 1, and a doubleheader the following day, Sunday, May 2. Friday, April 30, the Reds will spend a scheduled off day at Lambert Field, St. Louis, playing the Lambert Field team.

The Reds will return to their own ball yard Monday, May 3, to meet the Pittsburg Pirates. And against the Pirates on Tuesday, afternoon game is also listed May 4, while the first night game of the season is scheduled for Wednesday, May 5. The Chicago Cubs will follow the Pirates to Crosley Field, meeting the Reds in single games Friday and Saturday, May 7 and 8, and in a doubleheader on Sunday, May 9.

General Manager, Warren Giles of the Reds has been considering altering the starting time of some of the weekday games to cooperate with the war workers who would not be able to attend games at the regular starting time.

It is quite possible that an experiment may be made in the case of the game on Monday, May 3, when the first game of the series between the Reds and Pirates may start at 11:30 A. M. or noon. It is also possible that one of the games scheduled against the Cubs later in the week will be started about 5 o'clock. The reaction of the fans to these starting times will be closely watched.

The fresher a vegetable when it is used, the better the taste, the less the waste, and the more vitamins retained.

HINTS ON PRESERVING FOOD

One slice of bread molds, one carrot shrivels—multiply that by the Nation's 34 million homes. Fight food waste on the home front.

Cover fresh meat loosely. Wipe with damp cloth just before cooking. If ground, store in extra cool place and cook soon.

Fish and other sea foods spoil in a few hours at room temperature. Cook at once, or wrap in wax paper to keep odor from other food, and store very cold.

Don't wash eggs before storing. Water destroys the protective film that keeps out air and ordors. Wipe eggs off with dry, rough cloth. Store eggs in open bowl or wire basket in a cool place.

Keep bread and cake in ventilated containers, scalded, sunned, and aired once a week.

To hold the sweet in corn, peas, and lima beans and to keep snap beans fresh, keep them cold. Let them stay in the pod or husk unless you can store them tightly covered in refrigerator.

Thirteen billion dollars—the sum the Treasury must raise in the Second War Loan drive, is only one sixth of the estimated cost of the war for the fiscal year of 1943.

A TRIP TO THE ADVERTISER OFFICE
By Mary Belle Alexander

In Civicis Class the Freshmen and Sophomores of the Walton-Verona School have been studying about the three great groups of skilled trades, one of which is the printing trade. Having received the permission of the publishers on Thursday, April 15th we visited the office of the Walton Advertiser.

We were graciously received by Mr. Jarrell who showed us some of the orginal copy of newspaper material, when this is typed or clearly written it makes it easier for the typesetter or linotype operator.

The copy is printed by the linotype which is a large complex machine. The keyboard resembles that of a typewriter, when a key is pressed it released a copper mat which in turn makes an impression on lead blocks which are called slugs. The words in a series are on pieces of type which automatically fall into place.

Guy Carlisle, one of our classmates who works in the office, preceded us to the basement where he explained to us how pictures are prepared for the paper. The "mats" as they are called are obtained from a company which specializes in making them. The mats are put one at a time into a "caster", a "tail" is attached to the mat to prevent the hot metal from going under the mat, then the caster is tilted allowing molten lead to cover the mat, when the cast is removed it is handled by gloves and taken to a table to await cooling. After it is cool an electrical device known as a "router" is used, this cuts out the metal which is not to be printed.

The picture clugs and the slugs from the linotype are then placed in a form, the form is simply four large spaces which holds the lead blocks in place. When all the blocks are in the right position, it looks like a sheet of newspaper only it is black and backwards. The ink is then spread on the blocks and paper is fed into the press, the roller then sends the paper on to long wooden slats which in turn sends it on to the folder, this mechanism looks as if it cuts the paper; however it merely folds it for delivery.

Miss Sleet and the students thanked Mr. Jarrell for explaining to us how a newspaper is printed. It is very complicated and of course we could not understand it in forty-five minutes as the work requires skill and experience. The class returned to school feeling that the trip had been very educational and worthwhile.

Cauliflower, brussels sprouts, and broccoli lose freshness faster than cabbage. Leave them uncut; keep cold and not too dry.

The natural sugar in dried fruits keeps them from molding easily. Store them in a tight bag or jar in a cool place. Watch in warm weather for worms or weevils.

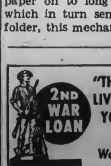
BUSY DAYS AHEAD

For Your Electric Refrigerator



Better Check it Over Now!

All winter long your refrigerator has been loafing along using only a fraction of its cold-making capacity, but the coming of warm weather means it will have to work longer and harder to protect your perishables. Food spoilage is taboo in these days of rationing, so give your refrigerator the care it needs to operate at peak efficiency. Don't let neglect rob you of vital food protection!

FOLLOW THESE POINTERS ON REFRIGERATION CARE

- Defrost whenever frost becomes ¼-inch thick.
- Cover all liquids. Keep defrosting tray dry.
- Don't set cold control any higher than necessary. Use quick freezing sparingly.
- Make sure door gasket seals tightly. Keep free of grease.
- Don't crowd shelves. Air circulation is vital to efficiency.
- Don't store hot foods. Let them cool first.
- Don't open door oftener than necessary. And close it quickly.
- Keep refrigerator clean, condenser coils dust-free.
- Oil open unit models periodically as instructed. Sealed units need no oiling.

NICHOLSON

"God is our refuge and strength". He alone sustains when shadows fall, "There is no death—they only truly live who pass into the life beyond and see this world is but a school preparative for larger ministry."

A shadow of deepest sorrow was cast upon a wide circle when Mrs. Julia Spanton Taylor recently left the earth for the eternal hills, for an extended period, she had lingered on the borderland, and every effort was put forth, to restoration, but despite untiring ministrations she peacefully passed from earth's shadows to the realm of cloudless day and in some fairer cline, she has entered the higher life. Her beautiful christian life was a radiant reflection of the sunshine of God's love.

Survivors include her devoted husband, Mr. Harry R. Taylor, one daughter, Miss Lillie Isabel and two sons, Corp. George Edward and Harvey, Corp Taylor was stationed at Pearl Harbor when it was treachoursly attacked by the Japanese and who now serves in the South Pacific area, sisters, brothers and other relatives to whom deepest sympathy is extended." Following the last rites interment took place in the city of silence in Florence Cemetery. "How beautiful to be with God when earth is fading like a dream and from this mist encircled shore we launch upon the unknown stream no doubt, no fear, no anixious care but comforted by staff and rod, in the faith brightened hour of death. How beautiful to be with God."

Aid to Enemy

"Any American who wilfully neglects to pay his taxes on time or to invest every cent he can in War Bonds is surely giving aid and comfort to the enemy . . . . We have a job to do and we are all called for service to our country. Our dollars are called to service too. Let us all ask ourselves, 'Shall we be more tender with our dollars than with the lives of our sons?' " — Secretary Morgenthau.

THE 2ND WAR LOAN DRIVE IS ON!

Winner Take All!

There is one stark and simple fact about war which you had better get straight... and quickly, too

THERE IS NO SECOND PLACE IN A WAR—IT'S EITHER WIN OR LOSE!

WAR FINANCE COMMITTEE

This war is being fought for tremendous stakes . . :

: : . for your life and your liberty.

: : : for your church and your children.

: : : for your freedom and your future.

And it's WINNER TAKE ALL. Don't forget that for a minute.

The winner will dictate whether tomorrow you shall be a free citizen of a free world, or a helpless serf to a "master race."

The winner will dictate whether you shall live and prosper under the Four Freedoms, or toil hopelessly in the darkness of a "New Order."

The winner will dictate . . . because the winner takes all.

The winner takes all. All you own, all you hold dear.

The winner is being decided right now . . . today . : : this very minute . . . on battlefields all over the world. Will you stand idly by . . . or throw all your weight on our side?

The weight of mighty tanks and planes. The weight of thousands of guns and millions of shells. The weight of billions of dollars . . . 13 billions which your country asks you to lend during this Drive.

Your country wants to borrow every idle dollar you have—every dollar except what you need for the barest necessities of life.

You'll have to give up some luxury or comfort which was dear to your heart. You'll have to postpone some pleasure which you had been eagerly anticipating.

But what of it?

Your sons and brothers and husbands are dying out there . . . fighting your fight. Surely it is no sacrifice to lend your dollars while they are giving their lives.

They need your help. They need the weapons your money can buy. If one of the War Loan volunteers calls on you . . . greet him with open pocket-book. Remember, Uncle Sam's goal is 13 billion dollars in April.

Don't wait to be asked. Go to your nearest bank, investment dealer, broker, Post Office or issuing agency and lay your money on the line. Remember, it's an investment you're making—an investment that pays a good return and insures a happier future for you and your loved ones.

So lend up to the limit.

You'll sleep better for it.

BLOCKS—READY MIXED CONCRETE—ROOFING

IN EVERY price range today there are handsome flowered materials for slip covers. The patterns are designed so that a motif may be centered in each part of a chair to make a panel. This is not difficult to do if you cut straight pieces first according to the widest and longest measurement of the part to be covered, plus one inch at all seams and four inches for a seat tuck-in.

Pin and trim to fit, as shown. Seams that are to be sewn without welting are pinned and basted from the wrong side. Unpin seams where welting is to be used. Baste the welting to the right side of the seam edge, then baste the seam. A right-toe cording foot is best for welted seams as it allows the bulky material to be on the left where it will rest on the machine leaf.

Trinkets for Africans

Every sixth soldier among the American troops that went to Africa carried a bag of trinkets for distribution to the natives as gifts or payments for small favors, reports Collier's. The idea behind these bags, which contained cigarettes, candies, beads, scissors, perfumes, sugar, tea and coffee, was to show that our men were not looters but generous friends.

FOREWORD

This story was told me largely in the officers' quarters of the Motor Torpedo Boat station at Melville, Rhode Island, by four young officers of MTB Squadron 3, who were all that was left of the squadron which proudly sailed for the Philippines last summer. A fifth officer, Lieutenant Henry J. Brantingham, has since arrived from Australia.

These men had been singled out from the multitude for return to America because General MacArthur believed that the MTB's had proved their worth in warfare, and hoped that these officers could bring back to America their actual battle experience, by which trainees could benefit.

Their Squadron Commander, Lieutenant John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant-Commander) of course needs no introduction. He is already a national hero for his part in bringing MacArthur out of Bataan. But because the navy was then keeping him so busy fulfilling his obligations as a national hero, Bulkeley had to delegate to Lieutenant Robert Boling Kelly a major part of the task of rounding out the narrative. I think the reader will agree that the choice was wise, for Lieutenant Kelly, in addition to being a brave and competent naval officer, has a sense of narrative and a keen eye for significant detail, two attributes which may never help him in battle but which were of great value to this book. Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox, Jr., also contributed much vivid detail.

As a result, I found when I had finished that I had not just the adventure story of a single squadron, but in the background the whole tragic panorama of the Philippine campaign—America's little Dunkirk.

We are a democracy, running a war. If our mistakes are concealed from us, they can never be corrected. Facts are frequently and properly withheld in a war, because the enemy would take advantage of our weaknesses if he knew them. But this story now can safely be told because the sad chapter is ended. The Japanese know just how inadequate our equipment was, because they destroyed or captured practically all of it.

I have been wandering in and out of wars since 1939, and many times before I have seen the sad young men come out of battle—come with the whistle of flying steel and the rumble of falling walls still in their ears, come out to the fat, well fed cities behind the lines, where the complacent citizens always choose from the thousands those papers whose headlines proclaim every skirmish as a magnificent victory.

And through those glum cities the sad young men hack from battle wander as strangers in a strange land, talking a grim language of realism which the smug citizenry doesn't understand, trying to tell of a tragedy which few enjoy hearing.

These four sad young men differ from those I have talked to in Europe only in that they are Americans, and the tragedy they hear witness to is our own failure, and the smugness they struggle against is our own complacency.

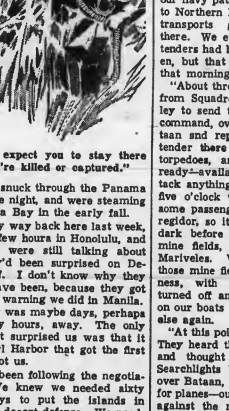
CHAPTER I

"You don't understand," said the young naval officer, "we were expendable." He was very earnest as he lolled on the bunk in the officers' quarters of the torpedo station at Newport, along with the other three officers who had also just got out of the Philippines.

I admitted I didn't understand.

"Well, it's like this. Suppose you're a sergeant machine-gunner, and your army is retreating and the enemy advancing. The captain takes you to a machine gun covering the road. 'You're to stay here and hold this position,' he tells you. 'For how long?' you ask. 'Never mind,' he answers, 'just hold it.' Then you know you're expendable. In a war, anything can be expendable—money or gasoline or equipment or most usually men. They are expending you and that machine gun to get time. They don't expect to see either one again. They expect you to stay there and spray that road with steel until you're killed or captured, holding up the enemy for a few minutes or even a precious quarter of an hour.

"You know the situation—that those few minutes gained are worth the life of a man to your army. So you don't mind it until you come back here where people waste hours and days and sometimes weeks, when you've seen some friends give their lives to save minutes—"



"Look, never mind about that," said Lieutenant John Bulkeley, the senior officer. "People don't like to hear about that. I've learned that in the week I've been back. Let's start at the beginning. And first a word about us.

"We four are what is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron three. Last fall there were six little boats—and about a dozen men to a boat. Each one is a plywood speedboat, seventy feet long and twenty feet wide, powered by three Packard motors which can send her rearing over the top of the water about as fast as a Packard automobile ever gets a chance to travel on a highway. So fast, in fact, that those motors have to be changed every few hundred hours. They should be, but what happens to that pretty theory in a war is another story—we lost every spare motor when our bases were bombed, and some of those in the boats had to do quadruple their allotted term before the boats were lost—but that's getting ahead of the story.

"Each boat is armed with four torpedo tubes, and four 50-caliber machine guns—firing in pairs from each side. As for armor, well, there's a story on that. The first time we tangled with the Japs one of our machine-gunners kept crouching down behind the shield which rose just under the noses of his guns. When it was over we asked him why he hadn't stood up to fire.

"'Hell,' he said, 'I didn't want to get nicked. I was crouching down behind that armor.' Then we had to tell him that shield was ¾-inch plywood—keeps spray out of your eyes, but it can't stop anything the Japs might send. There isn't an ounce of armor steel on the boat—we're little eggshells, designed to roar in, let fly a Sunday punch, and then get the hell out, zigging to dodge the shells—but again I'm getting ahead.

"We went out to the islands last fall. I was commanding officer of the squadron—I'd picked every officer and man in the outfit from volunteers—told them we were heading for trouble. So they piled us and our six boats on a tanker. In late summer, we snuck through the Panama Canal one night, and were steaming up Manila Bay in the early fall.

"They expect you to stay there until you're killed or captured."

"On my way back here last week, I had a few hours in Honolulu, and the boys were still talking about how they'd been surprised on December 7. I don't know why they should have been, because they got the same warning we did in Manila. That war was maybe days, perhaps even only hours, away. The only thing that surprised us was that it was Pearl Harbor that got the first attack, not us.

"We'd been following the negotiations. We knew we needed sixty more days to put the islands in shape for decent defense. We needed planes and tanks. Most important of all, at least half the Filipino army had never had a uniform on until a few weeks before the fighting started. They needed training, and Washington knew this just as well as we did, and of course didn't want war.

"But now for a little geography. Here's Manila Bay—a big beautiful harbor twenty miles across. At the far end is the city of Manila, and if you were suddenly put down there, you'd think you were in Los Angeles, until you noticed the faces of the people. At the mouth of Manila Bay, the upper lip is Bataan Peninsula and the lower one is Batangas, with the Rock—Corregidor Island—a hard little pill between the two lips. And we are stationed at Cavite, the big American naval base on the lower side of the bay, about halfway between Manila and the harbor's mouth.

"We're under orders of Admiral Hart, who is Commander in Chief of the Far Eastern fleet, based there. Only how long will we stay? Because as war drew close, rumors began to fly. If it came soon, we might be getting out because we didn't have air superiority. The Japs could run down from Formosa and bag our little Asiatic fleet, so maybe we'd be pulling out for the southern islands, waiting for aircraft carriers which would bring fighters to protect us.

"The night of December 8 we were all asleep in the officers' quarters at Cavite," Bulkeley went on, "when my telephone rang about three in the morning and I first learned the Japs had struck at Pearl Harbor."

"When they shook me, I didn't believe it," said Ensign Akers. He's a tall, dark silent Texan. "I was sure they were kidding. I just said, 'It's a hell of a time to declare war,' and rolled over."

"The message said I was to come on down to the Commandantia," continued Bulkeley. "It's an old thick-walled Spanish building, and when I got there, Admiral Rockwell, who was in command at Cavite, and Captain Ray, his chief of staff, were already dressed. Dawn was just beginning to break over Manila Bay, and the Admiral was watching the sky. 'They ought to be here any minute,' he said. And then he told me to prepare my six boats for war stations. They were going to send us over to Bataan at the naval base in Mariveles Harbor, just opposite Corregidor."

"I was prepared for the war," said Kelly, the squadron's second in command, a tall blond lieutenant with quick blue eyes. "I'd heard about the secret operation orders—what the fleet would do under any of three eventualities, so the night before I'd gone over to the Army and Navy Club at Manila and put aboard the thickest charcoal-broiled filet mignon I could buy there, plus French fries and a big tomato with Roquefort dressing, finishing off with brandy and a cigar. I figured I'd at least have them to remember.

"We spent that first day fully manned, anticipating a bombing attack. Five of the boats were dispersed along the shore about a hundred yards apart—the sixth was patrolling. All day we loaded them with food—cans of corned beef, Vienna sausage, vegetables, and canned potatoes—don't laugh at that, it's better than rice—canned fruit, fruit, coffee.

"I saw the first planes about noon flying out over the bay. At first I thought they were ours, but after about a minute our shore batteries opened up. They were coming over at 20,000 and of course immediately we shoved all our boats off and out into the bay. But we heard nothing drop. It was probably just a reconnaissance raid—feeling us out.

"Of course there were all kinds of rumors—that Zamboanga and Davao, down in the southern archipelago, had been taken. Also that our navy patrol planes had gone up to Northern Luzon to intercept Jap transports gathering off Aparri there. We even heard our aircraft tenders had been surprised and taken, but that one proved false. Yet that morning, nothing was sure.

"About three o'clock orders came from Squadron Commander Bulkeley to send three boats, under my command, over to Mariveles on Bataan and report to the submarine tender there for food, water, and torpedoes, and to remain on the ready—available to go out and attack anything he ordered us to. By five o'clock we'd set off. We had some passengers to deliver at Corregidor, so it was eight and plenty dark before we were outside the mine fields, feeling our way into Mariveles. We thought we knew those mine fields, but in pitch-darkness, with the mine-field lights turned off and of course no lights on our boats now, it was something else again.

"At this point the army took over. They heard the roar of our motors and thought it was Jap planes. Searchlights began winking on all over Bataan, feeling up into the sky for planes—our motors were echoing against the mountains on Bataan, so they couldn't tell where the noise was coming from. Every artillery post for twenty-six kilometers around went on the alert, and for a few minutes it was a question whether we were going to be blown to hell by a mine or by one of our own shore batteries.

"But finally we snaked through, tied up alongside our sub tender, and then its skipper delivered a piece of nasty news. Told us he had orders to get under way just before daylight, out to sea—didn't know just where they were sending him—maybe south, maybe the Dutch East Indies, anyway, he wouldn't be back.

"So then the fun began. There we were—no base, rations for only ten days, and a big problem in how we were to live ourselves and what in hell we would do with the boats when the planes came over. In addition to which, we were almost flat out of gas, and what would we do for fuel to fight this war?

"Pretty soon we began finding some of the answers. For instance just around the coast from Mariveles in Naiman Cove was a native village—practically abandoned except for a few families—about twenty nipa huts in all. We moved in and took over. A nipa hut is a little contraption—single room with thatched roof and sides—up off the ground four or five feet on bamboo stilts. Under it the natives keep their pigs and chickens. The floor is split bamboo, and never very tight, so the crumbs and small pieces of garbage dropped on it can sift down into the pigs and chickens. In one corner of the hut is a sandbox, and on this sand they build a fire for cooking. There never is a chimney—the smoke just goes out the windows or through the floor cracks.

THE RISEN LORD

LESSON TEXT—John 20:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—He is risen.—Mark 16:6.

"Christ is living! My people shall know it. I shall preach about it again and again until they believe as I do." So exclaimed Dr. Dale of London when the glory of Christ's resurrection laid hold of him as never before. There began that day the custom of singing an Easter hymn in his church every Sunday morning.

Easter has come again, and it ought to make us glad to recall the resurrection power of Christianity in the midst of the world's awful sorrow and death. Easter should mean more to us than ever this year, if we believe in Christ. If we do not, why not rid ourselves of the dark garments of unbelief, and put on the bright and beautiful garment of faith in a living Christ. Let us be clad in His righteousness.

The first Easter Sunday had scarcely dawned when the faithful Mary came to the tomb. Finding the stone rolled away from its entrance she ran to find Peter and John. What they came and saw, and what—rather who—she remained and saw, make up our interesting lesson.

I. Peter and John Saw the Empty Tomb (vv. 1-10).

Peter, though he had denied his Lord, was not sent away by his brethren. They knew his true heart, and evidently the gentle and loving John had taken him to his home. Mary knew where to find him. What a tender incidental indication of the Christian spirit of the brethren of Peter.

John and Peter ran to the tomb. The unusual news so stirred them that John the younger did not think to await the slower steps of Peter. He came first, but when he did he looked in. Peter had no hesitation, but went right in. What he found there was most significant.

Here was twofold evidence that the body of our Lord had not been stolen. The burial clothes were there. They had not been carried off by a thief. Nor had they been snatched aside by a deceiver. They lay in order. There off to one side carefully folded, was the head covering. Jesus was gone, but He had left in all the dignity and majesty of a triumphant Lord.

What they saw caused John to believe. It appears (v. 9) that they had not yet understood the clear teaching of the Old Testament regarding the death and resurrection of Christ. They were slow to believe. Let not any in our day, with its greater light, fail to believe.

Peter and John came and saw—and then "they went away again unto their own home." And so they missed seeing Christ Himself.

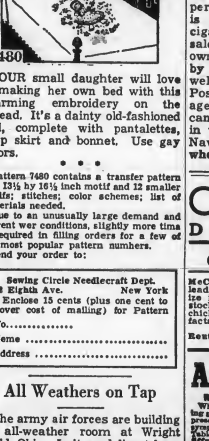
II. Mary Met the Risen Christ (vv. 11-17).

The tears of Mary were the genuine expression of a devoted heart, but they were nevertheless mistaken tears. The question of the angel reveals that fact. Why weep because His body was gone, when that was the very thing which should give her joy? Why weep over a dead Christ when He was alive?

How often our discernment is dimmed by tears and our judgment warped by sorrow. We look on the wrong side of our circumstances and see only a tangle of threads and blurred colors. On the other side God is weaving a pattern of beauty and blessing, which will be our joy through all eternity. Why not remember that now?

Blinded with tears and troubled in heart, Mary did not even recognize the Lord when He spoke to her. But our Lord looking into her soul and knowing that it was her very love for Him which made it hard for her to think of anything but His death, gave to this true-hearted woman the privilege of first seeing Him after His resurrection.

As He spoke her name, she knew Him. We recall that Jesus Himself had said that He was the Good Shepherd who "calleth his own sheep by name" (John 10:3-14).



He knows your name and mine, fellow Christian, and one day we too shall hear His voice even as Mary did on that day. She believed and worshiped. Let us follow her example this Easter day.

There is a danger that the observance of Easter may lose its real significance in the empty incidentals which the world would have us believe make the day. It is a holiday. There is thought of new clothes, of formal church attendance, of family gatherings, of flowers and feasting. They are all right in their proper place. But let us be sure that no adult fails to meet the risen Christ today, and let us be sure that the smallest child knows that this is more than the day of bunnies and candy eggs. They will rejoice in the knowledge that a victorious Christ lives to give them eternal life.

Let us really "keep the feast" this year, purging out the leaven of hypocrisy and dead works, and remembering Christ (see I Cor. 5:7, 8).

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

A single 10-ton pontoon bridge sets up 2300 pounds of rubber and 2.01 pounds are used for each roll of adhesive plaster made for the Army's medical corps.

We've heard a lot about tire switching lately, but the practice would become more common if every driver realized that equalizing wear on all tires can increase tread mileage as much as 50%.

With conservation in mind keep your rubber goods in a cool, dark place, preferably away from direct heat, or exposure to sunlight, oil and grease.

To make the bullet-sealing gasoline tanks of a Flying Fortress requires 1000 pounds of rubber.

Parthenium Argentatum is what botanists call Guayule (pronounced Y-U-le-ee) a scrawny desert shrub of Central America and Southwest U. S. which is being developed for its rubber content.

WALTON ADVERTISER

— NORTHERN KENTUCKY'S LEADING WEEKLY NEWSPAPER —

Devoted To the Interest of Boone, Kenton, Gallatin and Grant Counties—Kenton-Campbell Courier Consolidated With the Advertiser

Our Job Is to Save Dollars
Buy War Bonds Every Pay Day

Subscription $1.50 Per Year In Advance | WALTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, APRIL 29th, 1943 | VOLUME 29—NUMBER 24

Bond Subscriptions for Second Week Ending April 24th Totals $215,558.50, in Boone County

Individual subscriptions for the past week amounts to $215,558.50, which amount added to the first week's subscriptions makes a total of $334,639.75 up to April 24th, which still leaves a shortage of $139,360.25 from our goal of $474,000.00 This shortage must be made up before April 30th if we reach our goal. A number of counties have already gone over their quotas and we don not believe Boone County is less patriotic than people of other counties. Don't let some of our boys come home with an empty sleeve or an empty trousers leg, walking on a crutch, and point their finger at Boone County and say", where were you when I was wounded in action defending your homes?" This must not happen. This week will tell the story of our Second War Loan Drive. Your subscription must be in the banks before April 30th. After that date it will not count.

Only 601 people out of a population of 10,000 have subscribed to this total of $334,639.75 to date, in Boone County. This is a wonderful showing for this 601 people and the drive must continue until April 30th to have a wider distribution of subscriptions. Certainly some of our good Boone County citizens are not doing their patriotic duty and are standing back and permitting a few public spirted citizens to carry this load. In the Fourth Liberty Loan Drive in the last war over 1800 people in Boone County subscribed to that one particular loan. We have more money now than we had in the last war and there is no good reason why at least this number of citizens of our county should not subscribe to this loan. This week will tell the whole story, as the Second War Loan will have passed into history. Will your name be recorded as a loyal patriotic citizen in this drive now closing? We are judged by our acts, not words in this war. The War Finance Committee of Boone County instructs its workers not to beg any one to do his or her patriotic duty by subscribing to these War Bonds, which are the best investments on the face of the earth and the principal returned to you at maturity, or if you need the money you can cash your bonds in any emergency at any time. Why should any one hesitate to subscribe? The interest rate it better than any bank will pay you on Savings Acounts or Time deposits and your investment is Government guaranteed, which is safer than any bank or a mortgage on real estate. The dead line is closing time of your bank on April 30th except as to Series E, F and G, which must be in your banks before that time. What is your answer? Our soldiers need your support. Our soldiers in camps and on the firing line will hear what Boone County does in this drive. Lets make them happy by overscribing our quota.

DO NOT NEGLECT

Do your eyes "dodge Service," flinch as you read, stray when you observe, fail to register in your mind all which they should? Even if you are wearing Glasses—improper ones—now, for Comfort's sake . . . for safety's sake . . . for success's sake, stop in for a vision checkup!

May 2nd Is Sunday School Day In Ky.

Hundreds of Sunday schools over the State are preparing for increased attendance next Sunday, May 2nd, which is GO-TO-SUNDAY-SCHOOL DAY IN Kentucky. The promotional campaign has been under way since early in April.

Inaugrated on May 3rd, 1941, by the late Dr. George A. Joplin, at that time General Secretary of the Kentucky Sunday School ass'n, the first observance of Go-To-Sunday-School Day resulted in an attendance of 650,000 in the Sunday Schools of the state, which was just about double the number ever present on any one previous Sunday. The movement attracted attention all over North America. Within a few years twenty-six states and some of the provinces of Canada were following Kentucky's lead in observing a Go-To-Sunday-School Day.

After the first successful year the observance became a part of the regular program of the Kentucky Sunday School Association. And the need for the continuance of such a program is apparent. Based on a Sunday school survey made by the Association in 70 Kentucky counties, it is estimated that there are approximately 658,440 persons enrolled in the more than 5,000 Sunday schools in Kentucky. With a total population of 2,847,647 (according to the Federal census of 1940) it can easily be seen how many people are still to be reached.

One of the purposes of the day is to give an invitation to every person to attend Sunday school on May 2nd. Earnest effort are being made in this direction but do not permit the lack of an invitation to keep you away. There is a place for you in some Sunday school; a hearty welcome awaits you, and the Advertiser joins with the Sunday schools and churches of this community and of the state in inviting everyone to attend the Sunday school and church of their choice on next Sunday, May 2nd, GO-TO-SUNDAY-SCHOOL in Kentucky.

A. D. Yelton Seeks Nomination For Judge

Makes Formal Announcement To Voters In This Issue of Advertiser.

A. D. Yelton, Burlington, makes his formal announcement as a democratic candidate for the nomination of County Judge of Boone County.

Mr. Yelton is well known to Boone County people, having been a county officer for some time. He has earned the reputation of being the outstanding clerk in the 15th Jud. District.

Mr. Yelton ask us to print the following statement:

'Prior to 1941, I was approached by some of the leading citizens of Burlington and other parts of the County, with the suggestion that I become a candidate for County Judge at the 1941 August primary. I carefully considered the matter, but out of deference to the late lamented Judge Riddell, I decided to wait until some future date. Some of these suggestions have been renewed, and after mature consideration, I have decided to seek the Democratic nomination for that office, and to this end, I make this announcement.

"I do not believe that I need to be introduced to the people of this County, because it has been my pleasure, on account of your votes, to serve as Clerk of the Circuit Court and to be Master Commissioner for the past nine years. During these nine years, I have endeavored to discharge the duties imposed upon me by the law of Kentucky, without fear or favor to any group. How well I have succeeded in this, is for the people of the County and not for me to judge.

"The office of County Judge is very important, and in many Counties is filled by attorneys, but the law of Kentucky does not require this, and in my judgement, apart from attending and graduating from a law school and being admitted to practice law, the next best opportunity to learn the intricacies of the law is to be in a court room day after day watching and hearing attorneys state all manner of legal questions and argue them, and I believe that nine years of such training has given me at least a fair understanding of the fundamental principals of justice, and a fair working knowledge of Court procedure.

"To me there is nothing more fascinating than law, and during these same nine years, in addition to watching and listening to the various legal debates in Court, I have at such spare time as has been at my disposal sought to familiarize myself with those sections of the law applying primarily to governmental matters, and with due modesty, I believe that if nominated and elected, I can discharge the duties of this important office in such a way as to furnish no reason for regret on the part of anyone for having supported me. At least such a course shall be my earnest desire, and I will make every effort so to do.

"Campaign pledges are oft times forgotten, and for this reason I shall make but two, and they will be general, and are briefly stated, thus:

"a. I will endeavor to give my whole time and attention to the discharge of the duties of the office.

"b. I will endeavor to cooperate with the Fiscal Court in such a way as to keep the fair name of Boone County's fiscal and financial status at its present high standing.

"I am thankful that we all live in a County where free elections still prevail, and we can at such elections choose our officers.

'I respectfully solicit your support and vote, with the hope that I may be commissioned by you to act as your County Judge and that my experience as Clerk of the Court will be of help to me in the discharge of those duties."

Father and Five Children Killed In Accident Here Saturday Afternoon

A Walton, Ky. father and five children were killed and the wife and mother of the family sustained a left arm fracture and internal injuries Saturday afternoon when a automobile in which they were riding crashed into a Green Line bus, leased to the Greyhound Lines, on United States Route 25, one mile north of Walton. The five children were killed outright and the father died early Monday at St. Elizabeth Hospital.

The dead:

Patsy Klumper, 12 years old; Earl Klumper, 10; Henry Bokelo, Jr., 3; Charles Bokelo, 2; John Bokelo, 18 months and the father, Henry Bokelo, 30 years old.

The two older children were Mrs. Bokelo's by a former marriage.

The father was taken to the hospital by Kentucky State Highway Patrolmen Astor Tinman and Buford Wainscott. Mrs. Bukelo was removed by the ambulance of Chambers and Grubbs, Walton funeral directors. Bodies of the children were taken to the funeral home.

Witnesses told investigating officers that Bokelo was driving south. As he rounded a curve one mile north of Walton a team of horses and a wagon, also traveling south, loomed in front of him. In an effort to avoid hitting the wagon, Bokelo swerved into the path of the northbound bus, then passing thewagon. The larger vehicle plowed over the automobile crushing the top.

The bus was operated by Charles Urich, 1308 Hermes Avenue, Covington, who suffered shock. The bus was empty.

Traffic was blocked for several miles while rescuers were removing the bodies and clearing the highway of wreckage.

The Bokelos has been visiting friends in Northern Kentucky and were returning home when the accident occurred.

Mrs. Bockelo is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brock, Erlanger, Ky. Two brothers of the father, William and Ben Bokelo, also reside in Erlanger. The family moved to Walton from Erlanger one year ago.

Funeral services for the five children were conducted at 6:30 p. m. Sunday in the Florence Cemetery with Father Egbring in charge. The five victims, resting in seperate caskets, were buried in one large grave. Chambers and Grubbs were in charge of the burial.

Arrangements for the funeral of Mr. Bokelo were made by J. J. Radel & Son, Covington funeral directors.

Important Notice To Farm Truckers

An opinion has been forwarded to the Boone County USDA War Board by the Assistant Attorney General, according to Mark Cook, Chairman, regarding the hauling on a farm truk, licensed as such, of farm produce of a neighbor farmer as well as merchandise for such neighbor on the return trip.

"Due to the emergency that now exists in the nation and particularly due to the shortage of rubber, it becomes necessary that all citizens use every possible means to conserve this most vital material. A few weeks ago this office gave an opinion to the effect that automobile owners could carry in their passenger cars persons on what is generally called the 'Share-the-ride' plan without violating the provisions of the Statute governing buses, taxicabs, etc., and that the mere fact that those persons riding with the owner of the car contributed to the cost of he operation and upkeep of the automobile did not make the owner of th ecar an operator for hire. Following this same line of reasoning, it is the opinion of this office that a farmer may haul to market the produce of his neighbor farmer and on the return trip carry food and other necessaries for the neighbor and his family without violating the provision of the Statute concerning the farm truck license. Neither will he violate other provisions of the Kentucky Statutes regarding common carriers or contract carriers requiring certificates, weight tax, etc.

"I do not mean to convey the idea that a famer may go out and solicit business from other farmers either for the hauling of their farm produce to the market or hauling supplies to such farmers on his return trip, but it is our opinion that a farmer may only haul farm produce to the market and necessary supplies on the return trip for those farmers living with the same community radius of neighbors and that these or within the generally accepted neighbor farmers may contribute to the cost of the operation of the truck to and from the market.

"It would be indeed a hardship and would defeat every principal of the conservation of rubber and other necessary and vital machinery and materials to require a farmer to drive his truck many miles to market with only a partial load and his neighbor farmer make a trip with only a small load when they can share the trip and save the vital materials. For this reason, it is the opinion of this office that to share the cost of the transportation of these commodities to market, using only one truck, will not be considered a violation o fany of the provisions of the Kentucky Revised Statutes. Of course, the farmer should be warned against abusing this privilege and that if he tries to use his truck for commercial purposes, soliciting business and hauling indiscriminately, he will be violating the law and will be prosecuted for such activities in the event he is apprehended."

The Office of Defense Transportation has warned against the empty driving of trucks and that unless this practice is stopped, it will be necessary for that office to reduce the mileage considerably, and perhaps in some instances, even to revoke the certificates. Farmers should therefore cooperate in their hauling and in trying to save gas and rubber.

Pressure Cookers Rationed By C.F.R.C.

Instructions have been received by the County Farm Rationing Committee concerning the rationing of pressure canners, according to Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent. These cookers, made from vital war steel, are made under government contract to aid in the vast food conservation effort which is a part of the home front war program. No quota has been set on this item, and will not be until it becomes necessary

Persons desiring to purchase cookers should obtain application blanks from the Farm Committee office or from Mrs. Moore. An advisory committe will recommend applications to the Rationing Committee and purchase orders will be issued when approved applicants locate cookers for sale.

Applications will be recommended on the basis of amounts of food to be canned in the cooker. Neighborhood groups, organizations or individual families may apply.

According to advance information the cookers will be of a size to hold seven quart jars, and are described as having enameled steel bottoms and tin plated steel tops. The price will be approximate $15. There is reason to believe that they will not be on the market here for several weeks, but Mrs. Moore suggests that applications be made at an early date so the committee may act upon them before the cookers go on sale. Locals dealers should be contacted concerning the expected supply.

Misses Julia Moss and Sue Hance of Cincinnati visited their relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Evan Hance and family Sunday.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Rommel's Southern Front Stronghold Captured in British Eighth Army Drive; FDR, Camacho Join in 'Neighbor' Plea; American Fliers Pound Japs in Pacific

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of the newspaper.)

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, U. S. A., head of the Allied forces in Africa, takes the salute of a sentry as he inspects front lines in Tunisia. Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton Jr., commander of American ground forces driving through Tunisia, follows him. The colonel commanding the unit being inspected returns the sentry's salute.

TUNISIA:
Nazis Run Gauntlet

Axis efforts to reinforce their embattled srmies in Tunisia met strong Allied resistance as Gen. Bernard Montgomery's 8th army opened a successful assault on the Enfidaville passes on the southern front. Enfidaville, Rommel's coastal anchor, fell after furious fighting.

While British naval units charged an Italian convoy in the narrow channel separating Sicily from Tunisia, American and British fighter planes fell upon huge German Junkers transports and cargo planes crossing the straits.

While British Spitfires held off Axis fighter escorts, American Warhawks (P-40) dived to attack the giant Junkers, flying almost at water level.

Fifty-eight of the Junkers and 16 of the fighters were claimed shot down. That brought to 142 the number of Axis aircraft destroyed in a three-day period.

Gen. Montgomery's hardened infantry stormed initial Axis positions in the mountains after artillery had laid down a heavy barrage.

FARM MEASURE:
House Economy

In one of its sharpest economy moves to date, the house passed by a voice vote and sent to the senate an agriculture department appropriation bill allotting $715,099,622 for the fiscal year 1944 but abolishing the Farm Security administration and banning incentive payments to farmers.

In its budget request the department had asked for $947,134,491. The measure lopped $240,093,647 off the original request. The revised total was reached by adding $20,000,000 for the Rural Electrification administration and striking $12,000,000 sought by the FSA for rural rehabilitation loans.

In its final form the house bill abolishes the FSA, abolishes the federal crop insurance program for wheat and cotton, stipulates that none of the funds may be used for incentive payments to farmers producing war crops, sets aside $300,000,000 for the AAA conservation program, prohibits payment of more than $500 to any one person for soil conservation purposes, prevents restoration of the Regional Credit Agricultural corporation and allots $20,000,000 for REA.

Belief was expressed in some quarters that the senate committee would reinstate the FSA to prevent it from being snuffed out.

RUSSIA:
Scramble for Base

Portending possible large scale action in the Caucasus, German troops continued their pressure in the Novorossisk region.

While the Russians claimed to have beaten back Nazi efforts to prevent their forces from tightening their vise around Novorossisk, the Germans said the luftwaffe pounded Red positions and supply bases on the Black sea coast.

Novorossisk stands as the Germans' lone important base in the Caucasus. Situated across from the Crimea, it was the only major position retained by the Nazis during their retreat this winter. It is a relatively short distance to Novorossisk from the Russian mainland connecting with the Crimea.

GOOD NEIGHBORS:
Visit in Monterrey

"We have, all of us, recognized the privilege of interdependence—one upon another."—Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"Good neighbors. Good friends. That is what we have always wished to be for all the peoples of the earth."—Manuel Avila Camacho.

With those words, spoken on Mexican soil, the President of the United States and the president of Mexico reaffirmed the unity of the Americas and offered the good-neighbor policy as a model for the world, once the "machinery of barbarism constructed by the dictators is completely destroyed."

President Roosevelt arrived in Monterrey, site of the historic meeting, following an extensive tour of inspection through war centers in the southern part of the United States. He was high in praise of the troops, which he compared with those he had seen on his trip last September. He told the press he had found morale very, very high and declared the men looked extremely fit.

PACIFIC:
Action at Both Ends

Giving the Japs no rest, American fliers pounded enemy air fields and shipping at both ends of the Pacific.

Flying Fortresses, Liberators and Avengers struck at the Jap air base of Kahili in the Solomons, starting big fires and pocking the runways with bomb craters. Other units attacked Munda farther to the west, also causing damage.

While the air fields were being raided, Avenger torpedo planes sailed into a cluster of Jap ships bearing reinforcements for enemy troops in the Shortland island area of the Solomons. Five hits were scored on a 10,000-ton vessel, which was left sinking, and two other ships were hattered by hits and near misses (bombs exploding alongside the target).

In the Aleutians to the north, bombers and fighter planes swooped down on Attu and Kiska. Results were unobserved at Attu, but hangars and camps were blown up and grounded planes strafed at Kiska.

WAR MANPOWER:
27 Million Frozen

If you're an employee in an essential industry, you're as good as frozen for the duration.

That is the substance of the War Manpower commission's orders forbidding employees in essentisl industry from changing jobs except under especial conditions.

Under the WMC'a order, a worker must be irregularly employed or not employed to his best ability in an essential industry before he can shift jobs. In regions in which the WMC has decreed no labor shortage exists, employees in essential industry can take higher paying jobs if the moves are approved by the WMC.

The WMC order does not affect employees in non-essential industry, who are free to switch positions. In all, some 27 million workers are affected by the WMC ruling.

Invoking provisions of the Economic Stabilization act, the WMC established a fine of $1,000 and a year's imprisonment for violation of the order.

FOOD SUPPLY:
Another Pull on Belt

Following a statement of the Office of War Information that there would be a reduction of 6 per cent in the food supply for this year, the department of agriculture revised its previous production estimates downward.

The department said there would be about 12 pounds less meat, a pound less poultry and fish, 2½ pounds less lard, margarine and cooking compounds, and about 10½ pounds less citrus fruits per person than anticipated earlier. Fractional increases were reported for canned fruits, potatoes and rice.

Despite the cut, the department said that the food supply per capita would equal the 1935-'39 total, but that rationing would spread the amount more equitably. The department also revealed that food production in 1943 will be 3 per cent above last year, if favorable weather prevails, and 31 per cent above the 1935-'39 average.

Of the total supply of food available this year, however, the army, lend-lease and world relief will obtain 25 per cent. Army requirements are based on a force of 8,200,000 men, who eat twice as much as civilians.

In its report, the OWI declared that food shortages will bring "inconveniences" and "exasperations" to consumers, but will not affect their life or health.

TOKYO:
Stung From Hornet

Equipped with a 20-cent bombsight, 16 North American B-25 medium bombers used the flight deck of the aircraft carrier Hornet to take off for the historic raid on Tokyo.

The Hornet was 800 miles from Tokyo when the B-25s rose in the air and headed for the Japanese coast line. As they approached, the airmen flew in at low level to avoid detection, and then raised their planes to 1,500 feet as they plastered factories, railways and refineries in Tokyo, Nagoya, Osska and Kohe.

The original plan was to alight at certain points in unoccupied China, but storms arose, exhausting the planes' ebbing fuel supplies. Of the 16 craft, 15 made crash landings or were lost as their crews bailed out. Major General Doolittle, who led the raid, was among those who parachuted to safety.

Of the 80 pilots, eight fell into Jap hands. One was killed and two are still missing. Sixty-four survived, many of them landing in occupied China, but working their way to the unoccupied zone with the help of friendly natives.

Weak fighter opposition was encountered and anti-aircraft fire was inaccurate as the Japs were caught completely by surprise.

GOEBBELS:
No End of Sufferings

"The war is in its fourth year and has reached its hardest stage so far, and the end or a way out of its hurdens and sufferings is at present nowhere in sight."

Thus spoke Nazi Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels on the eve of Adolf Hitler's 54th birthday. Goebbels said the fuehrer would spend the day at field headquarters.

While Goebbels spoke, Marshal Herman Goering issued an order of the day to the German army, stressing the same forehoding note.

Said he: ". . . We will follow the glorious German flag in accordance with our oaths as brave soldiers—in any hours and in any fight on land and sea in any area with the greatest readiness to sacrifice."

Eulogizing Hitler as the "liberator of the fatherland," Goering also called him the "savior of western civilization from the Bolshevik menace."

SUBMARINES:
Planes vs. Wolves

Allied airplanes have joined in the battle of the Atlantic.

Manning American Flying Fortresses and Liberators and British Sunderlands, Allied airmen are ranging far into the North Atlantic to strike against packs of Nazi U-boats, attacking the east-bound convoys.

Attached to the British coastal command, these long-range heavy bombers are meeting the harassed convoys on the last leg of their journey. They are dumping thousands of depth charges on the wolf-packs they can spot from aloft.

In recent action, the bombers delivered 19 attacks in four days. Seeking to avoid the concussion of the depth charges, U-boats climbed to the surface and then engaged the airplanes with anti-aircraft fire from their decks. The British air ministry claimed no kills, but said there was evidence of at least five submarines destroyed.

The Allied planes were manned by British, Canadian, Rhodesian, Australian, New Zealand and Belgian aviators.

FOOD CONFERENCE:
U. S. Has No Scheme

Representatives of United Nations will crowd Hot Springs, Va., May 18, for the Allied food conference sponsored by the United States.

According to Sen. Alben Barkley, the conference will be chiefly exploratory, with the various delegates specifying the needs of conquered peoples, the means required to restore production in occupied countries and the mutual distribution of foodstuffs.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

LEND-LEASE: Lend-lease shipments to North Africa during the first four months of Allied occupation reached $26,250,000. Shipments included flour, sugar, clothing, seed.

HONEST STEEL: In a special report, the Truman war investigating committee called upon steel producers to overhaul their inspection systems so as to assure the government of the highest grades.

FOUR FREEDOMS: Speaking in Guayaquil, Ecuador, Henry Wallace said that unless the four freedoms were instituted after the war, democracy will have failed.

PRAYERS: Prayers for peace were asked as the Vatican inaugurated weekly broadcasts to Russia. The broadcast told the people not to give up hope for a peace despite the continuance of the war.

FOOD AND PAY-AS-YOU-GO

Although food was supposed to be the chief topic of discussion at the recent White House conference with farm leaders, actually Foodczar Chester Davis did his best to sell the President on pay-as-you-go taxation. He proposed it as an anti-inflation measure to drain off surplus income and ease the work of income tax payment on the average citizen.

"We have simply got to come to it, Mr. President," argued the food chief. "It was unfortunate that pay-as-you-go taxes were given a black eye by the Rumi plan. But pay-as-you-go taxes should go hand in hand with rationing to prevent overspending."

The President didn't commit himself definitely, but indicated that he would favor a pay-go plan if windfalls to the wealthy, as provided for in the Rumi plan, were completely eliminated.

Ed O'Neal, president of the Farm Bureau federation, and Ezra T. Benson, executive secretary of the National Council of Farmer Co-operatives, also took up the cudgels, O'Neal contending that taxpayers wouldn't be able to meet next year's assessments unless the pay-as-you-go plan or forced saving were adopted.

G.O.P. Watching Chances.

"I've made a poll of taxicab drivers and they are all for it," said O'Neal. "The great majority of the American people feel the same way. They are against windfalls but they feel they won't have enough money to pay their income tax payment next year. If the administration doesn't take some action on this, the Republicans will steal the ball from you."

"That's right, Mr. President," chimed in Benson. "The farmers in my organization are overwhelmingly for a pay-as-you-go tax program. I think labor is, too."

"Maybe you're right," responded the President. "Chester (to Davis), I suggest that you talk this over with congressional leaders."

The conversation then turned to farm distribution and the President drew on his own experience as a farmer to illustrate the difficulty "little farmers" are having getting their crops to market.

"I used to raise 100 barrels of apples every year on my Dutchess county farm in New York," the President said. "I also raise some apples on my land in Georgia."

Apple Competition.

The President grinned to Albert Goss, master of the National Grange who hails from Washington, the biggest apple-producing state in the country: "I'd stack my apples up against those you produce in Washington any day."

"You're getting out of your class, Mr. President," smiled Goss. "Have you ever eaten a Delicious?"

"You win, Albert," chuckled the President, "but the point I am trying to make is this—little farmers like myself, and the same goes for all other farmers who don't have the advantage of co-operatives, have encountered a lot of difficulty marketing their crops and getting their money since the war began because of the transportation problem and other factors."

"Don't you think the government should step in and buy up apples and other products that have been running into distribution troubles and store them in the warehouses?" the President asked Goss. "It would take a lot off the market and help many little farmers who are hard up for cash."

Helping Little Farmer.

"I don't agree with you, Mr. President," replied Goss. "I think the way to protect the little farmers is by continuing the agriculture department 'support price' program. Farmers can go along if they are assured that they can get fair prices and a decent break on priorities for machinery to produce their crops. I don't think the government should buy up and sell farm products when there is no necessity for it."

The President meditated for a moment and replied: "I guess you're right at that."

The meeting also thrashed out the question of price ceilings, Ed O'Neal of the Farm Bureau and Albert Goss of the Grange contending that if rationing were tight enough it wouldn't be necessary to have price ceilings, that rationing would automatically take care of prices. Justice Byrnes, Chester Davis and Jim Patton of the Farmera Union argued to the contrary. The President decided with them.

His order shortly thereafter putting price ceilings on almost everything was the chief result of the meeting.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Ambassador John G. Winant has provided an apartment in London for six American soldiers wounded in action with the British Eighth army in Egypt. Three are Harvard men, three from Dartmouth. The six graduated as the top six in a British officers training school before going to Egypt with the British 60th regiment. This is the famous regiment which in Revolutionary times was withdrawn from action in America because it was too friendly to the colonial cause.

Terrible Hatreds Kindled By 'Blood Revenge' Spirit

Rumors From Embattled Nations Hint of Plans for Organized Extermination Of Enemy Peoples.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

It was a soft, Washington spring afternoon. The late shifts of government workers were hurrying home. The two guardian magnolias that stand on the White House lawn were tipped with the rays of the setting sun. My thoughts were neither on this blissful scene nor on the latest news of the battlefront which I had just finished broadcasting. Frankly, I was concerned chiefly with dinner.

The announcer was just finishing the "commercial" and I was picking my hat up from the sofa in the studio when I saw the engineer beckoning to me from behind the glass wall of his goldfish bowl. He held up a paper on which was printed "Stop in News Room—Important!"

I did. The atmosphere was tense as it is frequently these days. A notice had just appeared on the news ticker to the effect that the White House was about to release an important statement.

It is possible, but not probable, that the thing we were all thinking that statement was going to announce but didn't, will happen before these lines resch print—the invasion of Europe. Until it does, we shall continue to expect it and while the busy home front keeps our nose pretty well to the grindstone, one hint from overseas and an atmosphere of suspense envelops the Capitol.

Secrecy's Curtain

Meanwhile, there is the feeling that tremendous things are happening under a heavy curtain of secrecy in Europe even the hint of which does not reach the press or the public.

Russia, of course, is a mystery.

What is happening there? Is the remarkable Red army, which in the past has seemed to be able to draw endless men and supplies from nowhere after each crushing defeat, finally exhausted? Spring came early to the steppes this year and the Germans, if they are able, will launch their annual summer offensive a month earlier. They hope to be able to break the Red army this time and then hold back the remnants with a sparsely manned but intricate line of defense while they turn their attention to the Allies in the West.

No one knows what the strength of Russia is today. One does know that a terrible hate has been enkindled in the whole race against the Germans and it is reported that the Red army has threatened that if Soviet forces ever do reach German soil, they will leave no human being living. One story has been spread through Switzerland that if an Allies' army is on the continent when Russia breaks Germany's eastern frontiers—if she does—that the Germans will open their western front to the Allies and let them in rather than expose themselves to the Russians.

Plan for Prisoners

Another report has seeped out of Russia. It is continuously repeated that simply because of the inconvenience of caring for prisoners, both the Germans and Russians have been shooting men who are captured or who surrender. On the other hand, the Russians are said to be carefully preserving some of the men they take. Russian propaganda, dropped over the German lines, is very alluring. Some of the pamphlets instruct the German soldiers to surrender and bring with them the leaflet which acts as a passport.

Then, according to a report which has come in from a neutral country, the prisoners are carefully examined and a small percentage weeded out for Soviet indoctrination. They go through a long course of instruction so careful that it is said finally only 10 per cent are accepted as satisfactory. These elite are then trained to be used as the spearhead of a political invasion of Germany.

Hatred, like that in Russia, has poisoned all Europe. There is a belief now on the part of many of the conquered countries that the Germans, having given up hope of victory, intend to go forward with a systematic extermination of other races within their reach as they have in Poland and with the Jews, so that regardless of what happens, the Teutonic stock will dominate numerically when the war is over. To meet this, the other nations are talking about turning the tables and beginning organized mass murder of Germans everywhere the moment the Nazi armies lay down their arms.

Only the other day, I talked with a widely traveled Russian newspaper man, who said frankly that he believed this was the proper course.

How powerful this spirit of blood revenge really is and whether it will be carried out, one can only guess.

Another mystery of which there are only tiny hints is the power and scope of the underground movements in the occupied countries and the extent to which Allied agents are now working hand-in-hand with the saboteurs in France and Belgium and particularly Holland. Hints leak out.

Saboteurs

A secret German report which reached Allied hands stated the following:

"Sometime ago, English parachutists landed near Prague. When they were held up by the local police, they obeyed the order, 'hands up.' But they carried a special device on their belts with a pistol from which cords ran to their hands. The latter fired the pistol. Thus they succeeded by a quick and appropriate movement in accounting for the policemen."

Here is a part of another enemy report, revealing the activities behind the lines. It came through Italian military channels:

"During the attack on the Fuka Aerdrome (Africa) the enemy Allied troops put up distress signals. They succeeded in enticing the sentries away from their posts for a time and successfully carried out their sabotage."

Reports have come of British saboteurs gaining entrance to factories in the daytime, planting time bombs and leaving. A device has been perfected which can be carried concealed in the hand—I have held one—attached by a clever means to a tank car or a locomotive, it would blow it to pieces. That is only one of hundreds of ingenious gadgets which have been perfected for this strange work of secret destruction that is going on everywhere. Even more ingenious are the methods which the underground organizations in France and Italy are using to obtain arms and supplies for the insurrection when the moment comes.

Some day, "an important statement from the White House" will come, heralding events many of which we have not even dreamed.

While the airplane factories turn out bombers and fighters, the airmind leaders continue to make their air plans for peace. The latest scheme which has come to my attention is an announcement from the Northeast Airlines company which says this company has made application for a helicopter service to carry air mail and air express in New England.

These little planes that can rise straight up and hover, can land on a parlor rug. They would, in this proposed service, land on the roofs of post office buildings—provided, I take it, that the buildings are not of the rococo vintage with peaked and pointed and turreted roofs.

The service would carry first-class as well as air mail, according to the application filed with the Civil Aeronautics board. Four hundred points would he included. The little "flying automobiles" would not only fly between towns and cities but would carry mail from urban centers to the large airports where the mail would be transferred to the air liners.

A national labor service act still hovers just beyond the horizon. The chief purpose of Manpower Commissioner McNutt's intricate plans, including shifts of men from non-deferrable industry to war work is to build the machinery so that when the act is passed it can be put into effect at once.

Now that the farm labor problem has been taken off McNutt'a doorstep, and with the definite "back-to-the-farm" trend, congress may ease up on McNutt and give him the money he needs to build his prenational service machinery.

TO YOUR Good Health

by DR. JAMES W. BARTON

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

LIGHT EXERCISE

It is unfortunate that a couple of outstanding physicians should advise that exercise should not be taken by those past 40 years of age. They were so opposed to exercise that they suggested that lifting the little finger unnecessarily might cause harm.

Now these physicians had but the one thought in mind and that was to discourage those middle-aged individuals from taking exercise who thought that "strenuous" exercise was needed just as much, if not more, at middle age than for those under 40. The advice was given to prevent strain on heart and blood vessels. These physicians are aware that in the treatment of the middle aged or elderly of average health the last thing they would want them to do is to rest all the time, that is become bedridden. This is because the body needs to move itself to keep heart, blood vessels, lungs, appetite, digestion and bowel movement normal. To rest all the time would lower the health mentally and physically.

I have in mind particularly those who are overweight and among the methods of getting rid of excess fat are already taking exercise or have been planning to take some exercise. As a matter of fact exercise is the "natural" way to reduce weight because it creates extra heat thus melting away the fat tissue which is inactive and developing muscle tissue which is active and heat creating when it is active.

"Exercise improves the circulation, sweeps away the stagnant waste materials which collect in the body, creates a sense of well-being which lasts for a long time afterward and burns fat."

The overweight individual because he is overweight does not like exercise as every movement of his body means that he must do much more work than one of normal weight. But as he gradually removes the stored fat on his body and increases his muscular strength he gets a threefold benefit—(a) removes excess fat, (b) increases his muscular strength and (c) because of this increased muscular strength loses his dislike for exercise. The fact that exercise is now easier to take, that he can feel himself becoming lighter and more "limber" makes exercise actually "inviting" to him.

Dried Foods Aid To Victory Effort

One of the things learned during the war, which will mean health and happiness to many more thousands than before the war, is that water can be removed from food on one side of the ocean, the food shipped in a space many times smaller to the other side of the ocean, where by adding water to the amount previously removed makes the food as nourishing as when it was fresh.

The London correspondent of the Journal of the American Medical Association states that research work carried on at the Low Temperature Research station, Cambridge, in co-operation with other institutions in Britain, and in the United States and dominions, has made possible the following beneficial results.

"It is estimated that removing the water from foods, while maintaining their food value, has saved shipping to the extent of 3,000,000 tons of water annually. A quart of milk has a volume of 69 cubic inches and weighs 41 ounces. Condensed, it has a volume of 27 cubic inches and weighs 16¾ ounces. Reduced to a powder, it has a volume of 15½ cubic inches and weighs 5½ ounces. With the powder compressed into a block the volume is reduced to about 7¾ inches from 15½. The discovery that fresh milk can be reduced to such a small space makes the rich spring and summer milk available for use in the winter, when there is less sunshine for cows and for human beings. This is of considerable importance.

Great Britain will import 100,000 tons of dried eggs in 1943. If this amount of eggs were shipped in the usual way with water and shells it would weigh 500,000 tons and take six times the amount of shipping space. A similar saving is made by importation of dried meat. Another advantage is that dried eggs and meat do not require refrigeration for transportor storing.

QUESTION BOX

Q.—Are the internal organs of pork and beef considered safe for consumption?

A.—The organs are a valuable food. Should be well cooked.

Q.—Would it be safe for a person subject to sharp, stabbing pains in the right side of the chest to drive a car?

A.—While these symptoms point to a muscular pain, one visit to your doctor will show whether it is more serious.

Army Captain Solves Inspection Problem

PINE BLUFF, ARK.—An army captain at the arsenal has solved the problem of having things ship-shape for inspection.

The arsenal's public relations department said the captain loaded everything he didn't have room for on a truck and kept it cruising about the reservation until the inspection was completed.

Arms Production Sets New Records

50 High Explosive Shells a Minute Is Output.

WASHINGTON.—Fifty shells every minute, day and night—or a total of 1,932,000 high explosive projectiles—were turned out by American ordnance manufacturers in February, Robert T. Patterson, undersecretary of war, reported.

At the same time, Mr. Patterson said, the shops and arsenals produced 419,000 bombs of all sizes, up to the blockbusters which have been shattering enemy-occupied industrial regions. He estimated that that was enough for reids in which 15,000 bombs could be dropped each night for nearly a month.

In addition, he said in reporting that armament production is 300 per cent higher than a year ago, industry "hung up a new record" for small arms ammunition in February. That record consisted of 1,244,000,000 cartridges in calibers .30, .45 and .50, or more than 500 every second during the month.

Machine gun and tank production also is jumping, Mr. Petterson said. In January and February 150,000 machine guns and 134,006 sub-machine guns were turned out, while 5,000 tanks were rolling off assembly lines. This compered with production of 132,000 machine guns of all calibers in the first World war.

Other production figures for the January-February period included: 28,000 army trucks, 6,000 enti-tank guns; 5,000,000 peirs of marching shoes, and in February alone, 7,800 weapon-bearing combat vehicles.

Mr. Patterson noted that the 1943 production progrem called for $57,-000,000,000 worth of arms, ammunition, supplies and installations.

"We will meet that figure," he said.

Master Sergeant Still Is Active at Age of 60

EPHRATA, WASH.—A battlefield with bursting shells and chattering machine guns is home to 60-year-old Master Sergt. Luis C. de Pineres y Toore Viejas, who bears the scars of more than a score of battles and the decorations of several armies.

His long and colorful military career is hardly equaled by eny other member of the United States armed forces.

And to show he is still a fighter at 60, Sergeant de Pineres has passed a rigid physical examination qualifying him for service overseas.

The dapper Spaniard was born into an aristocratic Colombian family, but fled to the United States when a revolt in which he participated failed.

His medals include the Croix de Guerre with two palms, the Order of the Purple Heart, the good conduct medal, the Mexican campaign medal, the Colombian Croix de Boyain and—.

"I don't weer the rest," he explained, "because people stare and I feel like a store window dummy."

General Pershing decorated him three times in World War I and he was kissed by Marshel Foche, commander of the French forces.

In the Colombien army he rose to the rank of a lieutenant colonel. He became a captain after six yeers' service with the French Foreign Legion and then served four yeers with the Spanish army. He has been a member of the United States army for 17 years.

British Bombs to Carry 'Air Mail' to the Reich

LONDON.—Air meil service for private messages from the British people to the Germans will be established this summer, but the messages will not be very readable on arrival. They will be pasted on the sides of 2,000 heavy bombs.

The "Wings for Victory" committee directing the war-sevings drive announced that persons buying war stamps would have an opportunity to paste them on bombs, canceling the stamps with their names or a short messege. They will be unloaded on Germany after the drive ends in June.

The stamp purchasers will realize no return beyond the satisfaction of their messages.

Two Build Tank, Buy It; They'll Take It to Front

LONDON.—Radio Moscow reported on the all-out war effort of Ivan Bokyo and his wife. Bokyo and his wife were workers in an armament factory, building tanks. After helping to build one, they used their life savings to buy it.

Radio Moscow said they had received Premier Stalin's permission to take their tank to the front and fight it

Victory Garden Clothes Stage An Intriguing Fashion Parade

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

HERE'S news that is big news—Victory garden fashions! Now that debutantes, career girls, housewives, in fact men, women and children in every station of life are so enthusiastically turning to hoeing and planting and digging in answer to the challenge that Americans must not only feed themselves but must provide food for millions across the seas, a new chapter on "what to wear" when tilling the soil is writing itself into fashion history.

Never have smart, gaily colorful cottons had such a chance to "show off" as they now are having in the present coast-to-coast Victory garden style parede. Rugged work demands rugged apparel, and if you went to build an in-the-garden wardrobe that will be right from the very foundation up, the ideel thing to do is to start with corduroy, the cotton that tops them all when it comes to "looks" and dependable wear combined.

When there's husband-and-wife work to be done in the Victory garden the proper clothes that make one feel fit will help produce bigger, better tomatoes and carrots, cabbages, beans, peas and potatoes—a bit of psychology worth trying out. Cordurex (for him) and cordurella (for her) will be right at home with spades and trowels. These lightweight corduroys are comfortable to wear because of their soft, yielding texture and long-lived because of their sturdy durable construction. Then, too, corduroy offers warmth in early planting and are patriotic in the bargain for, being cotton, it conserves wool for the armed forces. When it's harvest time in summer their light weight makes them just as comfortable to wear.

As seen in the illustration, Mr. Gardener views the results of his efforts, clad in his corduroy ensemble done in good landscape colors—yellow for his shirt, sage green for his slacks. Mrs. Gardener, as pictured blends nicely with the plants in her overalls of dark green with adjustable straps. Large patch pockets keep working tools handy.

Displaying her Victory garden produce, the sprightly little farmerette seated to the right wears a pinafore of blue cotton chambray with heart bib outlined with polka dot percale, which also makes the blouse. The bonnet matches the pinafore end is lined with polke dot. You will see the heart motif stressed all the way through the play clothes and garden togs program this season.

That charming little green and striped cotton frock to the left is a cleverly styled New York creation done in simulated jumper effect. It has special fashion interest in that it is a favorite with Bonnie Beth Byler, chosen as 1943's "Maid of Cotton" sponsored by the National Cotton council. Bonnie is touring the country this spring in an all-luxable cotton fashion show, telling women how to care for and conserve cottons.

For a refreshing diversion and for a treat to the eye it is time well spent to go sauntering about in the Victory garden displays stores everywhere are staging this season. You will come across such diverting items as e Maude Muller sunbonnet of gay print ensembled with a bulb basket of metching print. It has huge side pockets for garden utensils. A striped garden apron has an ample leatherette knee pad stitched on to protect you from stones and dampness, also there are convenient pockets for trowel and seeds. As to the moral of this story—beg, borrow or lease a plot of ground, then get into your corduroys or denims or gay picturesque cottons and do your duty with a smile!

Long Gloves

Short sleeves, long gloves, that's the new formula fashion prescribes for the dressy afternoon frock and for the street-length dinner gowns so vogiish this season. Black with blue is the color scheme for this pretty-as-a-picture print gown shown for spring. The sleeves are short, the gloves long, in accordance with fashion's decree. The peplum gives a two-piece effect, and the slit skirt is a new note.

Lovely Shirtwaists Worn With Skirts

Much ado is being mede about shirtwaist-and-skirt costumes. The big news about them is that they have gone extremely dressy. The fashion begins in the 'teen-age set, who will be wearing the most eye-thrilling dirndl skirts of gay print (especially glazed chintz) fancy can picture. These they top with exquisitely dainty lingerie shirtwaists. The peesant type blouse with a low-cut drawstring neckline is the favorite type.

Fact is the new shirtwaists and blouses are just too pretty to cover up with a suit jacket. There is a ledylikeness about the lovely shirtwaists made of rayon crepe in either pastels or chelk white. The newest out is the blouse of stark white crepe which is frilled up and down the front and about the neckline with lace frills falling over the wrists. For later in the seeson you will be wanting one of the simply styled very sheer chiffon blouses. These are so transparent they call for a camisole. The sleeves ere usually wrist depth, although some of the new-type shoulder-cap sleeves are shown.

Knitted Slacks

It is said thet the new knitted slacks are a welcome "find" in that they are so lightweight and supple. They are designed with a smart tailored look and with a bright print jacket top or blouse they make a chic outfit for lounging and with a knitted sweater jacket are goodlooking for sports and outdoor wear.

Speaking of Sports

By Bob Mcshane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE desire to start picking pennant winners burns all the more brightly this year because, in our opinion, it probably will be the last opportunity to make selections on the major league races until after the war.

Much has been said about the chances for a wide-open scramble in both leagues, due largely to the inroads of the draft. But it is becoming apparent that the lines are clearly drawn. Confining this week's history-making, blood-curdling document to the National league, we agree with the betting commissioners that the Cardinals and the Dodgers are the teams to beat.

And, further than that, the Cardinals will be the National league entry in next fall's World Series.

Our complete selections for the senior circuit—which are as ridiculous as anything thought up by a tortured imagination—follow:

National League.

1—St. Louis	5—New York
2—Brooklyn	6—Pittsburgh
3—Chicago	7—Boston
4—Cincinnati	8—Philadelphia

The Cardinals were the best club in baseball last season and it is our opinion they are still the best in their league today. What other team can boast of as strong a pitching staff? They have Mort Cooper, Ernie White, Max Lanier, Howard Pollet and six or seven others who are good. They can afford to lose four or five from this group and still have a fine staff left.

Durocher Speaks

Leo Durocher, as usual, doesn't agree with the findings. According to Leo, "the Dodgers will have a lot to say about it. And we'll say it with high-class pitching, and e flock of base hits. I think we have every bit as good a chance to win the National league pennant as the Cardinals have."

Leo Durocher

Durocher admits that St. Louis gets the edge in speed. But he isn't giving anything away to the Cardinals' pitching staff. He can point with pride to Wyatt, Higbe and Head. This trio won 65 games last year and Leo figures them for closer to 60 games this season.

One issue can't be overlooked. Although the Cardinals look better going in, the draft may change the picture in a hurry. They are a younger team than the Dodgers, with greater speed and snap. But don't overlook this—those extra years may come as a big help to Brooklyn with the eyes of the draft boards looking in the general direction of youth.

The Chicago Cubs are due to trip up quite a few prognosticators who can't see them finishing better than their sixth place of 1942. The point has been made that the Cubs have as good a pitching staff as there is in the league.

We can't go along with this. Cooper, White, etc., with the Cardinals are too tough. The Cubs top hurlers are Derringer, Warneke, Passeau and Lee. In their prime it would be hard to find four greater stars. But they are no longer kids. In fact, their four careers add up to a total of 55 years—an average of nearly 14 years each in harness.

In 1942 these four Cub stelwarts won 53 games. It isn't impossible that they may be good for 60 wins in 1943. But they will need better hitting support than they received last summer.

The Case of the Reds

The Reds for 1943 are an unpredictable team. They have been picked for berths ranging from first place through sixth. They finished fourth last year. Their chief loss was Catcher Ray Lamanno who went into the armed services. Their main acquisitions are Eddie Miller, Braves' spectacular shortfielder, and Charley Brewster, Neshville star.

With Philadelphia safely ticketed for last place, the Pirates, Braves and Giants are likely to finish under a blanket.

Mel Ott, capable manager of the Giants, will get everything possible out of his team, but it's going to be hard to get along without men like Hal Schumacher, Johnny Mize, Harry Danning and Babe Young. New York will have hustle and some good pitching, but too many big guns are lost.

Frank Frisch will make every effort to lift his Pirates from last year's fifth place, but he lacks the materiel to make them a strong contender for pennant honors. The loss of Pitcher Ken Heintzelman to the armed forces may be offset by the addition of Xavier Rescigno, who won 23 games for Albany, and Wally Hebert, who won 22 games for San Diego last season. And Rip Sewell, who won 17 in 1942, will be on deck.

The Pirates finished fifth last season with 66 victories and 81 defeats. Their chances to improve seem rather slight at the present writing.

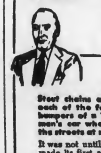
A General Quiz

The Questions



1. A radio wave travels so fast that in one second it can circle the earth how many times?
2. If a sailor is punished for being AWOL, where is he put?
3. The rank of colonel in the army corresponds to what rank in the navy?
4. What city pioneered in introducing music into the public schools?

6. How long is the period for which a patent is granted in the United States?
7. What is the average number of hen eggs to a pound?
8. Why is the sentence, "A quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog" used as a typewriting exercise?

The Answers

1. Seven times.
2. A sailor is sent to the brig; a soldier, to the guardhouse.
3. Captain.
4. Boston, in 1837.
5. Aesop's Fables.
6. Seventeen years.
7. Approximately ten.
8. It contains all the letters of the alphabet.

When the soldier talks about "the skipper" he means his captain, the head of his company. And that's just what the title "captain" means. It comes from the Latin word "caput" meaning "head." Another leader high in the Army man's favor is Camel cigarettes—they're first choice with men in the Army. (Based on actual sales records from service men's own stores.) When you're sending gifts from home, keep in mind that a carton of cigarettes is always most welcome. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Steel chains and padlocks bind each of the four wheels to the bumper of a Trenton, N. J., woman's car when she parks it in the streets at night.

It was not until 1916 that the U. S. made its first annual appropriation for Federal aid highways. Good roads, good automobiles and good tires are companion necessities in modern motoring.

It is generally believed that at speeds below 35 mph, tire blowouts, whether front or rear, are not particularly dangerous for alert drivers, other things being equal. Another good reason for keeping to the rubber-saving 35 mph limit!

In return for their stimulated rubber growing and collecting activities the United States has agreed to pay South and Central American countries from 33 to 45 cents a pound for rubber until the end of 1945 at least. Before government price freezing, rubber was selling in the U. S. at 22½ cents a pound.

NEW HAVEN P.-T. A. NEWS

The Parent-Teachers Association of New Haven School is very proud of its accomplishments of the past year, for like every other organization of its kind it has had to make severe curtailments in its regular program, due to war conditions and gas and tire rationing which cut our attendance record severely.

With the full cooperation of all teachers and active members the following note-worthy accomplishments have been achieved to-date: All necessary items such as new dishes and kitchen utensils were purchased at the opening of school in addition to two regular cooks being employed to replace the cook and helpers of past years. Four new tables were bought and placed in the lunch room and new finish was applied to walls and woodwork. All school lunches were handled on the ticket or cash system this year, which proved very successful in that it eliminated the heavy burden, to manager of book keeping. Under the competent management of the Lunch Room Committee and helpful suggestion from Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent the lunch room has furnished very nutritious meals through out the year to more than a hundred students each day. This branch of our association can feel justly proud of their feat for its nothing short of a feat to be able to feed such a large group of children under present limited food supplies and yet close the year with all figures written in black ink.

The membership Committe is to be lauded for in spite of transportation difficulties it was able to obtain the necessary 10% increase over last years enrollment that we might continue to rate 91 in the National Congress of Parent Teachers Associations of America.

At the Summer Round Up meeting in August this P.-T. A. voted to replace its candy store with the necessary equipment for handling ice cream. This was done and sales ran far beyond our fondest hopes. Ice cream being a very nutritious food we feel that the children have been benefited by its addition to their daily menu.

Our very competent president, Mrs. Harold Weaver has seen to it that many old bills have been paid and that each and every worthy cause such as sale of War Stamps, the Red Cross, T. B. Seals, Crippled Children's Tag Day and Student Aid have been contributed to most generously throughout the year.

With conditions as they are today, we feel that this has been a hard but fruitful year for this P.-T. A. but that all members and officers alike should feel that its been a good fight and work well done and with the support of all parents and patrons who will can any surplus on any fruits or vegetables they might have through the coming canning season to be donated to our lunch room next year, we feel that we can carry on in much the same praise worthy manner of past years. For further information on this or any other project of the P.-T. A. call Mrs. H. R. Weaver, Florence 885, for remember, we must feed our boys and girls of today, that they might become our leaders of tomorrow. Won't you help? We are counting on you.

WITH THE REDS

Cincinnati:-An experiment is to be tried by the Cincinnati Reds next week. As a means of determining whether the war workers in this vicinity, who also are baseball fans, prefer a week-day starting time that will coincide with their leasure hours, General Warren Giles has scheduled the Reds' Monday game with Pittsburg to start at 11:30 A. M., and the Friday, May 7, game with Chicago to start at 5 P. M.

Tuesday's game against the Pirates, which will be a ladies' day event, will start at the customary 3 o'clock, while Wednesday night the Reds and Pirates will play the first night game of the season. This tilt will start at 9 P. M. Saturday, May 8, the Reds will meet Chicago starting at 2:30, while the first doubleheader of the year on Sunday, May 9, also against the Cubs, will start at 1:30.

And so, under the new schedule, each game in the week the Reds will be at home will start at a different time, and those in charge of the Cincinnati Club will have a fine opportunity to determine which of the starting times is the most popular.

After next week's experiments, Giles will decide upon a definite starting time policy for the season.

The night game next Wednesday will be featured by a pregame military show, which will be featured by the WAACS in the Cincinnati office. Lt. Mary D. Russell, third officer, of the Cincinnati WAAC Recruiting Office, 311 Union Central Building, will make an appeal, over the Crosley Field loud speaker system, for enlistments. The WAACS in attendance will be backed up by several groups of soldiers, and a colorful program is anticipated.

The Reds are on the road this week. They had a three-game series listed at Pittsburg Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Saturday they will meet the Cardinals in St. Louis, then will play the World's champs again on Sunday in a doubleheader. Friday the Reds will be in St. Louis and will play an exhibition game at Lambert Field against the Naval Station team there.

That exhibition game against the Lambert Field "Wings" will be the first of six for the Reds against service teams. They are due to play at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, on May 11, at Camp Atterbury, Indiana, June 8, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, June 9, Great Lakes, Illionois, June 10, and at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, August .

1942 baseballs, a shipment of which is on the way, will be used by the Reds at all home games until the new, livelier balls arrive. The "nickel rocket" used in the first four games positively will not be used by the Reds at home.

THE 2ND WAR LOAN DRIVE IS ON!

"Attack!"

THE big push is on! This is the fateful summer that we have been waiting for. Hitler knows he must win before another winter rolls around, or face inevitable annihilation. And you can be sure that he will hurl everything he has—every gun, plane, soldier and tank—into the summer struggle that is even now rising in tempo on every front.

And when the command goes out to our fighting men to ATTACK—you can be sure they don't look for excuses. They don't hesitate. They strike fast and hard—as they did at Guadalcanal, in Tunisia and in the skies over Europe.

NOW the command has come on the home front to attack! To attack with the dollars that buy the weapons of war our boys must have to meet the last desperate assaults of Hitler. Your government asks you to lend it 13 billion dollars during this drive. And this historic 2nd War Loan Drive, which started April 12th, is the most urgent appeal America has ever made!

The time is short—act now!

When you attack with War Bonds you don't suffer pain or anguish—you don't risk your limbs or your life as millions of our boys are doing every day. All you do is make an investment—the safest in the world. You help to secure Victory now—and your own financial security.

During this drive if you are visited by a volunteer War Bond worker, welcome him. He will explain the 7 different types of U. S. Government obligations you may choose from. But don't wait for his call—go at once to your nearest bank or Post Office or place where they sell War Bonds. And answer the command to ATTACK by buying more War Bonds—and still more War Bonds!

THEY GIVE THEIR LIVES... YOU LEND YOUR MONEY!

You don't have to coddle your electric refrigerator. Just give it the ordinary good care that common sense dictates and it will serve you faithfully for years. But don't neglect it. Keep it clean . . . defrost often . . . oil periodically as directed.

ECONOMY TIPS FOR LONGER LIFE AND THRIFTIER SERVICE

- Defrost whenever frost reaches thickness of ¼ inch.
- Wash interior with weak baking soda solution each time you defrost.
- Keep defrosting tray dry. Cover all liquids.
- Be sure door gasket makes a tight seal.
- Don't open door oftener than necessary—close it quickly.
- Do not store hot foods. Let them cool first.
- Clean dust from condenser coils periodically.
- Use fast freezing sparingly. Keep control at lowest setting to maintain safe temperature.
- Don't store canned goods, ketchup, and other items that will keep as well on the pantry shelf.
- Don't overcrowd shelves. Leave room for circulation.
- If an open unit model, keep oiled per manufacturer's directions. Sealed units need no oiling.
- Have your refrigerator checked by a competent serviceman once a year. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. After learning that Pearl Harbor had been bombed, Lieut. Bulkeley ordered Lieut. Kelly to take three of the six torpedo boats to Bataan where they would get provisions and fuel from a submarine tender. But when they arrived, they found that the tender had been ordered away. So they set up headquarters in Sisiman Cove.

CHAPTER II

"For the most part we lived on our boats—had to, because we never knew when we would have to haul out into the bay in case of a dive-bomber attack. Anyway we had a base again.

"Next, we found our barges loaded with gasoline in drums which had been towed out into the bay for us by the navy—if they got smacked by bombs, they didn't want them burning near the wharves. There was nobody in charge but a watchman. Each boat holds two thousand gallons, and of course it was a job pouring all that through a funnel.

"We noticed, as we poured, that this gas had both water and rust in it—yet there was no way to strain it out; we had no chamois. What we couldn't then know was, this gas had been sabotaged. We'll never find out when or where—the guy who did it is safe, if he's alive. But someone had dissolved wax in it—wax which congealed inside our gas tanks in a coat half an inch thick—wax which clogged our filters so that sometimes we'd have to stop and clean them after an hour's run. That's the fuel we had to fight the war on, we were to find out.

"Then I went over to the section base to make arrangements for our food, and we got another bump. The navy already realized a food shortage was coming and cut us down to two rations a day—breakfast and supper. All you got for lunch was stomach cramps about noon. There was plenty of them.

"I also thought I'd better have the doctor look at my finger. I'd snagged it a few days before and hadn't paid much attention, but now it was swollen about as thick as a walnut. I guessed maybe it was a minor strep infection. What I didn't know was that out East the streptococci are bigger and meaner than bulldogs and not to be fooled with. He took one look and began to talk about the hospital, but I said the hell with that. I was the second officer of the squadron and badly needed.

"We settled that I'd come over to see this doctor daily.

"The big alarm came at noon on December 10—we'd pulled up alongside a mine sweeper for water when word came that a large flight of Jap planes was headed toward the Manila area, coming from the direction of Formosa. We pulled away from the tender, cut into open water, and fifteen minutes later we saw them—several formations—I counted about twenty-seven to twenty-nine planes in each—two-motor bombers — lovely, tight, parade-ground formations, coming over at about 25,000 feet. But, I thought, when our fighters get up there and start rumpling their hair, those formations won't look so pretty. Only where were our fighters? The Japs passed on out of sight over the mountains, and then we began hearing the rumble of bombs—only first we felt the vibrations on our feet, even out there in the water, and we knew something was catching hell. But what? Manila? Maybe Nichols Field? Or even Cavite, our own base? We couldn't know."

"I did," said Bulkeley laconically. "I was there, at Cavite. The Admiral sent us a two-hour warning that they were coming—from Formosa, and headed on down in our direction across Northern Luzon. So we hauled our boats out into the bay. They kept beautiful formations, all right. The first big V had fifty-four planes in it, and they came in at about 20,000, with their fighters on up above to protect them from ours—only ours didn't show! We couldn't figure it. First they swung over Manila and began to paste the harbor shipping. It was a beautiful clear day, and I remember the sun made rainbows on the waterspouts of their bombs. They were from a hundred and fifty to two hundred feet high, and it made a mist screen so dense you could hardly tell what was happening to the ships. It turned out nothing much was—they only hit a few.

"But then the big beautiful V pivoted slowly and moved over Cavite—began circling it like a flock of well-disciplined buzzards.

"They were too high to see the bomb bey doors open, but we could see the stuff drop slowly, picking up speed; only as we watched we found we had troubles of our own. Because five little dive bombers peeled off that formation, one by one, and started straight down for us. When they were down to about fifteen hundred feet, they leveled off and began unloading. Of course we gave our boats full throttle and began circling and twisting, both to dodge the bombs and to get a shot at them. Our gunners loved it—it was their first crack at the Japs. I remember Chalker's face; he's a machinist's mate from Texarkana—a shootin' Texas boy. He was pouring 50-caliber slugs up at them, cooler than a pail of cracked ice, but that long, straight, pointed jaw of his wes set. Houlihan, who was firing the other pair of 50's, was the same. They'd picked out one plane and were pouring it up into the sky, when we saw the plane wobble, and pretty soon she took off down the bay, weaving unsteadily, smoking, and all at once, two or three miles away, she just wobbled down into the drink with a big splash. So we know tha 35 boat got one. Meanwhile the 31 boat had shot down two more. After that the planes didn't bother strafing the MTB's. Guess the Jap pilots back at their Formosa base passed the word around.

"We went on back to Cavite and offered to carry more wounded. The big base was one sheet of flame except for the ammunition depot. Only a piece of the dock was left, and through the shimmering flames you could see only jagged walls. Then we saw Admiral Rockwell—he was directing the fire apparatus which was trying to save the depot. He is a tall man, a fine figure of a sailor, but his head was down that day. In a deed voice he told us we'd better get out—that the magazine was liable to go up any minute. We offered to take him with us to Mariveles, but he said no, his job was here, to do what he could to save the magazines.

"So we picked up from the gutters and streets a lot of cans of food we knew we would need—they were from the bombed warehouses—stacked them in the boat, and set out."

"I was back there a couple of days later after the fires were out," said Ensign Cox, a good-looking yellow-haired youngster from up-state New York. "They were burying the dead—which consisted of collecting heads and arms and legs and putting them into the nearest bomb crater and shoveling debris over it. The smell was terrible. The Filipino yard workers didn't have much stomach for the job, but it had to be done and done quick because of disease. To make them work, they filled the Filipinos up with grain alcohol."

"That raid gave me my first big shock of the war," said Lieutenant Kelly, "but it wasn't the damage they did. From over in Mariveles I couldn't see what was happening after the Jap bombers disappeared over the mountain. I got my shock after they had unloaded and flew over us on their way home—the same beautiful tight formations—not a straggler. Where was our air force?

"From over towards Cavite we could now see that huge column of smoke rising into the sky as the Japs left the scene.

"It wasn't until Lieutenant DeLong dropped in at four o'clock in the 41 boat that I knew how bad off we were. He said the Cavite base was a roaring blast furnace—the yard littered with those mangled and scorched bodies—and furthermore that all our spare parts for the MTB's—engines and everything—had been blasted to bits. Machine shops completely gone. Not so much as a gasket left to sew us through this war, with tha factory halfway around the world.

"Also he said the Cavita radio had been hit. That still left the short-wave voice stuff to talk with Manila or Bataan or the Rock, but of course this couldn't be secret from the Japs, so they would be depending on our six boats for courier duty to relay all confidential stuff."

"So I wasn't surprised," said Bulkeley, "when early the next morning I got a hurry call to report to the Admiral in Manila. As our 34 boat cleared the mine fields around Bataan, looking over toward Manila I saw something very queer—shipping of all descriptions was pouring out of that Manila breakwater into the open harbor—destroyers, mine sweepers, Yangtze River gunboats, tramp steamers, all going hell for breakfast. And then I saw them—a big formation of about twenty-seven bombers. By then I was beginning to learn that if we saw planes in the air, they would be Japs, not ours. Then came another formation of twenty-nine, and still another of twenty-six.

"If they were after shipping, we shouldn't get too close to the other boats, so I changed course. They wheeled majestically around the bay's perimeter, and each time they passed Manila a load would go whistling down and presently huge columns of black and white smoke began rising—we could even see some fires, although we were still eleven miles away.

"'Where in hell is our air force?' our crew kept asking me. 'Why in Christ's name don't they do something?'

"But the thing that really got me was that these big Jap formations, circling the bay like it was a parade maneuver, each time would sail impudently right over Corregidor! Didn't they know we had anti-aircraft guns?

"They knew all right, but it turned out they knew something I didn't. For presently all twenty of Corregidor's 3-inchers opened fire, and it made me sick to see that every one of their shells was bursting from 5,000 to 10,000 feet below that Jap formation. Those pilots were as safe as though they'd been home in bed. Later I found out what the Japs apparently already knew—that the Rock's anti-aircraft guns didn't have the range. And only then did it begin to dawn on me how completely impotent we were.

"When the Japs cleared out," continued Bulkeley, "Kelly and I headed for Manila and docked about three o'clock. When we reported, Commander Slocum told me the Admiral was considering sending our three boats on a raid off Lingayen, and were we ready? We said we were rarin' to go. So he said to stick around a couple of hours, and meanwhile to load the boats with files, records, and so forth, because they were moving headquarters. It had escaped so far, but right here on the water front it was too vulnerable — sure to get smacked. Through the open door we could see the Admiral conferring with his chief of staff.

"But just then," said Kelly, "Commander Slocum looked down at my arm, which was in a sling, frowned, and said I should get over to see the fleet doctor. The doctor took off the bandage and began to talk tough. Said he couldn't do anything, and that I was to get that arm to a hospital as fast as I could.

"I was dead sot on that raid, but I decided it wouldn't be tactful to bring that up, so I said, 'Aye, aye, sir,' and skipped it. We loaded the boat with records, and then went back to headquarters, where we were told that the Jap convoy off Lingayen included eight transports and at least two battleships (one of these must have been the one that Colin Kelly later got), but that we weren't going to be sent. They were saving us for 'bigger things.'

"'My God!' my junior officer said later, 'I didn't know they came any bigger! What do they think we are?'

"Anyway the Admiral patted Bulkeley on the shoulder and said, 'We know you boys want to get in there and fight, but there's no sense sending you on suicidal missions—just now.'

"So that was that, and we went on out across the bay, to our thatched village.

"You might call the next few days quiet for us, although my arm began giving me hell.

"Presently Bulkeley dropped in on us in the 41 boat, bringing us some stuff issued by the navy to replace everything we'd lost at our quarters in Cavite—a shirt each, underdrawers, a few tubes of toothpaste, and razors—two for each boat, one for the men and one for the officers. But with each razor there were only three packages of blades, so we saw beards in the offing.

"Bulkeley had heard about my hand from a pharmacist's mate and asked me if I could stick it for two more days until he could relieve me. He himself had to be on call for consultation with the Admiral, while they headed DeLong and his boat for courier duty. I said 'sure.'

"But the next few days were hell. The whole arm began swelling, and my hand was tha size of a catcher's mitt. The nights were worse because I couldn't lie down for any length of time. Also I had to keep my arm held up, or blood running down into it would drive me nuts, and it stiffened that way. The doctor at Mariveles kept offering me morphine, but I didn't dare. There might be an emergency where we'd have to get tha boats out to sea quickly. Bulkeley had left me in charge, and morphine might make me sleep so hard I couldn't waken for an air-raid alarm. The worst thing was the flies—they kept buzzing around trying to get into that open incision in my finger as I held my hand up in the air. And also I was running a little fever—about four degrees.

CHRIST'S CHARGE TO PETER

LESSON TEXT—John 21:15-24.
GOLDEN TEXT—Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.—John 15:13.

Breakfast for a hungry fisherman—that is what our loving and thoughtful Lord had provided on the shore of Galilee. He wanted to talk to Peter, but He knew this was needful first. There are some folk who think that following Christ is a doleful matter, devoid of every pleasure. Jesus never taught any such thing. He attended weddings and dinners even in the homes of those despised by men. But remember that He always did it for their spiritual good, not merely for His own enjoyment; and that He always brought the gathering up to His own spiritual level, rather than stooping to any worldly or wicked standards.

Here we find Him with a glowing fire upon which fish is broiling, and with bread ready for these hungry men. It was just like Him thus to meet in most delightful and satisfying fellowship those who serve Him. Drew up to the fire, Christian friends who are standing afar off. You may be so timid that, like the disciples, you will not dare to call Him by name (v. 12), but if you will come, you will find that the precious fellowship will soon warm your heart.

With the meal over, Christ turned to Peter and in their conversation we find the latter required to

I. Face Responsibility (vv. 15-17).

With kindly persistence our Lord brought Peter face to face with his responsibility of full-hearted devotion to Him. Before service can be rendered there must be a right relationship to the Lord.

Three times Peter was asked to declare his love for Christ. Such a public confession was quite in place, before the man who had thrice denied his Lord was restored to a place of leadership. The words "more than these" (v. 15) indicate that Jesus was asking of him a high measure of devotion. It is no more than He has a right to expect of us.

The conversation after breakfast that morning was a very profitable one. One is reminded, by contrast, that few of our mealtime discussions are very useful. Many (perhaps most) after-dinner speeches and conversations yield little profit. Here is an occasion when such was not the case. One wonders whether we would not be wise to take the suggestion and turn our thoughts and those of our dinner guests to spiritual things. Surely it should be so among Christian friends and in a Christian home.

II. Feed Christ's Flock (vv. 15-17).

We review the same verses to point out that an expression of love to Christ means nothing except as it manifests itself in service. Like Peter, we are to be diligent about feeding His flock, whether they be the young and inexperienced lambs, or the mature sheep of the fold.

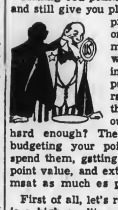
We tend to specialize. Even in soul-winning some give themselves to child evangelism while others reach only adults, and would hardly think of dealing with a child. True it is that we have varying gifts, and one does one type of work better than another. But let us avoid over-specialization. Every needy soul is a challenge to us as we present the gospel.

The word "feed" should be stressed. Here again the church has frequently failed. Men and women are won to a decision for Christ, and then forgotten. Sharp must be fed if they are to grow. A teaching ministry must accompany the evangelistic effort. They belong together, and to neglect either is to fail, at least, in that measure.

III. Follow Him to the End (vv. 18-24).

Endlessly ingenious are the devices of Satan. He who had sifted Peter like wheat (Luke 22:31) and had rejoiced in the weakness of his denial of Christ, now saw him stepping out into victorious living. He heard the prophecy of the martyr death of Peter. So he put into his heart a question. Why should he suffer? What about John? What was the Lord going to do for him?

When our enemy cannot trip us up with temptation to personal sin, he resorts to the device of jealousy. Many promising Christian workers have become useless because they have taken their eyes off Jesus and put them on the persons and work of other Christians. Doing a work which was difficult and unnoticed but very important to God, they have felt the urge to quit because someone else seemed to have the easier task and receive more recognition.



The answer of Jesus in verse 22 plainly states that it is not the place of one disciple to judge the course of life of another, nor to gauge his own devotion to Christ by another's place or service.

The word of Christ to us is the same as to Peter: "Follow me." We have all we can do to live our own lives in a manner well-pleasing to our Lord.

Neat Trick for Stretching Meat-Scrapple
(See Recipe Below)

Make Red Points Work!

Making red points fit your menus and still give you plenty of valuable proteins and fats on which to do a man - sized day's work is like working out a jig-saw puzzle. But you remember how they all can come out if you try hard enough? The answer is in budgeting your points before you spend them, getting meats with low point value, and extending flavor of meat as much as possible.

First of all, let's realize that meat is a high quality protein, and that the body needs it for repairing and building tissue—which is a full-time job. We designate proteins as complete and incomplete, the ones which are complete do a complete job of body building and repairing. Complete proteins are meat, cheese, fish, poultry, eggs and milk.

Incomplete proteins are those which can do just part of the job, and in this class we have breads, cereals, beans, peas and nuts. Of course we can use these foods alternately or in combination with meat, when we cannot get enough meat to fill our requirements. But, always, please bear this difference in mind.

Pork is our foremost source of thiamin or vitamin B_1—sometimes called the pep and energy vitamin because of its important contribution to mental health. Here pork sausage is combined with a cereal for a really delicious "stretched" dish:

All-Bran Scrapple.
(Serves 8)

1 pound fresh pork sausage
2 cups water
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon powdered sage
Few grains cayenne
⅔ cup cornmeal
⅔ cup bran cereal

Brown sausage in heavy skillet, stirring occasionally; pour off and save fat. Bring water to a boil, add salt, pepper, sage and cayenne. Stir in cornmeal gradually; cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Add bran cereal and sausage and mix thoroughly. Pour into dampened loaf pan; chill until firm. Unmold. Cut into ½-inch slices and brown in sausage fat on hot griddle. Serve with maple syrup or apple butter.

Chicken is a complete protein—and goes a long way, nicely in this delightful fruity salad which you'll enjoy serving company or Sunday night supper guests:

Lynn Says:

The Score Card: With 35 million homemakers carrying ration books to the grocers, new ways for managing limited foods are the order of the day.

Many of these homemakers are accustomed to pulling off cans from their shelves, or taking quick-frozen food from their storage lockers. Now they will have to glean all possible facts from labels of these processed foods, and study their points carefully.

It's smart to buy the size of can most profitable for her own individual family. Keep a table of equivalents handy in your purse until you become proficient. Usually, 16 ounces or one fluid pint will fill two measuring cups. The 32-ounce size will fill four cups.

Remember canned vegetables are already cooked and need be brought only to boiling to be ready to serve.

Buying fresh fruits and vegetables relieves pressure on canned goods.

Orange-Chicken Salad.
(Serves 6)

1½ cups orange sections
2 cups cooked chicken, minced
1 cup diced celery
½ cup lemon french dressing
Lettuce and other greens

Toss orange sections, chicken and celery together with the lemon french dressing. Arrange on six individual beds of greens or lettuce.

Kidney beans are a second-class or incomplete protein food, but they are fine to use on that extra day when there are no red points left over for meat. Dried peas and lentils have a low point value which makes them fine for tide-overs on meatless days: Grated cheese adds food value, takes only a few red points:

Kidney Bean Loaf.
(Serves 6 to 8)

2 cups dry kidney beans
2 cups water
4 cups stale bread crumbs
2 cups grated cheese
½ cup chopped onion
½ cup shortening
1 egg
1½ teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon pepper

Soak beans overnight in the 2 cups water. In the morning, bring to a boil in the same liquid and then simmer until beans are tender. Mash beans fine and add all other ingredients, mixing well. Pack into a loaf pan and bake 1½ hours in a 325-degree oven. Baste occasionally with 1 tablespoon melted butter and ¼ cup water.

You may use fish generously as a real menu aid during these days. Many types of fish are in season all the year round, and a great many others come in season during spring:

Fish Loaf.
(Serves 4)

2 cups flaked, steamed fish
½ teaspoon salt
2 eggs, separated
1 cup medium white sauce

BEDTIME STORY

PETER RABBIT LISTENS TO THE WRONG VOICE

PETER RABBIT didn't play fair. No, sir, Peter didn't play fair. People who have too much curiosity about other people's affairs seldom do play fair. He didn't mean to be unfair. Oh my, no! Peter didn't mean to be unfair. When he left Chatterer the Red Squirrel sitting on the old stone wall on the edge of Farmer Brown's Old Orchard he intended to go straight home to the dear Old Briar Patch. He was a little disappointed, was Peter, that Chatterer hadn't told him just where his new house was. Not that it really mattered; he just wanted to know, that was all. With every jump away from the old stone wall that desire to know just where Chatterer's new house was seemed to grow.

Peter sat down and began to pull his whiskers in a way he has when he is trying to decide something. It seemed as if two little voices were quarreling inside him. "Go along home like the good fellow you are, and mind your own business," said one. "Steal back to the old wall and watch Chatterer and so find out just where his new house is; he'll never know anything about it," and there'll be no harm done," said the other little voice. It was louder than the first voice and Peter liked the sound of it.

"I believe I will," said he, and without waiting to hear what the first little voice would say to that he turned about and very carefully and softly tiptoed back to the old stone wall. Right near it was a thick little bush. It seemed to Peter that it must have grown there just to give him a hiding place. He crawled under it and lay very flat. He could see along the old stone wall in both directions. Chatterer was sitting just where he had left him. He was looking in the direction that Peter had gone when he had said good-by. Peter chuckled to himself. "He's waiting to make sure I have gone before he goes to that new house of his," thought Peter. "This is the time I'll fool him."

It was louder than the first voice and Peter liked the sound of it.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, Peter Rabbit; this is none of your business," said that little small voice down inside.

"You're not doing a bit of harm. Chatterer has no business to try to keep his new house a secret anyway," said the other little voice inside. And because of his dreadful curiosity Peter liked the sound of that little voice best and listened to it, and after a while the first little voice grew discouraged and stopped.

Chatterer sat right where he was for what seemed to Peter a very long time. But by and by he gave a sudden funny little flirt of his tail and ran swiftly along the old wall a little way. Then with a hasty look around he disappeared in a hole. A minute later he popped his head out for a hasty look around and then disappeared again. He did this two or three times as if he was anxious. Peter chuckled to himself. "That's his new house right there," said he to himself, "and now that I know where it is I think I'll hurry along home to the dear old Briar Patch." He was just getting ready to start when Chatterer popped out of his hole and sat upon a big stone. He was talking out loud and Peter listened. Then his long ears began to burn, for this is what he heard:

"I'm glad that Peter's not a spy,
For spies are hateful as can be.
It's dreadful how some people try
Affairs of other folks to see."

Chatterer whisked out of sight and Peter hurried to get away. His ears still burned, and somehow he didn't feel so tickled over the thought that he had discovered Chatterer's secret as he had thought he would be. And over in the hole in the old stone wall, Chatterer the Red Squirrel was laughing as if there was some great joke. There was, and the joke was on Peter Rabbit. You see, he hadn't discovered Chatterer's new house at all.

Says Trading Work Would Help Solve Farm Labor Problem

Returning to the neighborhood system of trading work would go a long way toward solving the farm labor problem, thinks Dr. Roy E. Proctor of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

Pioneer farmers exchanged labor, helped one another during rush seasons, joined together to cut grain, thresh, raise barns, kill hogs and do other big jobs. Dr. Proctor thinks farmers might consider doing the same now, where there is a shortage of workers and when farmers fear they can't get their work done.

One means of geeting more work done, Dr. Proctr points out, would be for owners of power machinery to combine grain, bale hay, disk land or do other work, in exchange for hand labor of men who have no power machinery. A man might agree to help sucker tobacco in exchange for having his hay baled or he might plow corn in return for having his small grain harvested. This would make labor-saving machinery available for more farms.

There are times when one farmer may be rushed while a neighbor may not have much to do. This is a chance for one man to help out his neighbor in getting up his hay, making ensilage, harvesting grain or other work, in return for help in cutting tobacco or corn, etc.

Then there is the matter of getting together to do certain jobs that can't be done by one man, such as killing hogs, making hay, threshing grain and housing tobacco. Farmers can make up crews to do such jobs and thereby save time and work for each other.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"Y'know, Judge, I was thinkin'. It just don't seem fair, some counties having these Local Option elections while our boys are not here to vote for what they want."

"I think you're right, Sam. It's worse than unfair. It's the same kind of thing we fought our Revolutionary War to prevent. 'Legislation without representation.' Yet here they're voting whether or not to have legal control and sale of alcoholic beverages—when just about ten percent of our male population can't protest about it, because they're away in the Service."

"Judge, I'm against that sort of thing, and against the kind of people who try to put that sort of thing over on us. To me it seems just plain un-American to dictate to people—and most specially to do it behind people's backs, when they can't say even a word against it."

Service Roll Dedicated As Crowd Of Boone Countians Honor Boys And Girls In The Armed Forces -

Close to a thousand people gathered at the courthouse in Burlington on Sunday afternoon to honor Boone County men and women who are in the Armed Forces of the Nation. Inclement weather made it necessary to hold the program in the courtroom instead of at the south door as had been previously announced. A loud speaking system carried the program to those who could get into the building. The Service Roll was unveiled during the program and attracted much attention as the crowd was dismissed.

Mrs. John Boyer, Verona, citizenship chairman of the Boone County Homemakers Association, persided at the meeting. The Boone County School Band, under the direction of Noel Walton, presented a prelude consisting of Military Escort, America The Beautiful, and Onward Christian Soldiers. The invocation was led by Rev. Noble Lucas, Petersburg, which was followed by the singing of America.

Rev. Roy Johnson, Burlington, delivered the dedicatory address, complimenting the citizens for standing behind those in the Services, and charging them with the responsibilities on the Home Front. He closed his remarks with a prayer for the protection and guidance of those who are away.

Russell Hodge, Hebron, sang "Open The Gates Of The Temple", Mrs. Jerry Fowler accompained at the organ.

Mrs. Boyer presented A. B. Renaker, Chairman of the War Finance Committee of Boone County who announced that the Second War Loan Drive quota had been over subscribed. The individual quota was $474,000, and Mr. Renaker anticipated the subscription to reach well over $500,000. The banks had over subscribed their quota of $183,000 to reach $200,000. He, then, introduced Judge Joseph P. Goodenough of the Kenton Circuit Court who made the principle address. Judge Goodenough, in his dynamic manner, congratulated Boone County for the jesture of honor extended those in the Service, and pointed to the fact that home folk often are making sacrifices as keenly felt as those who have gone to serve the nation. He listed the heroes of this country who have served under many hardships but have given to the present generation a way of life unequaled anywhere in the world, and ended his address with the quotation from IN FLANDERS FIELDS.

God Bless America was sung as a closing prayer. The pledge to the flag was led by Rev. Johnson and members of the Boone Post of the American Legion. Nelson Poston played Call to the Colors, which was immediately followed by the singing of the National Anthem. The crowd withdrew to view the Service Roll.

The board resembles a scroll, with a national shield atop. The inscription "In Honor Of" heads the page, which bears the names of approximately 625 men and women. Four gold stars honor men who have given their all. Credit is given Hess Vest, Walton, who built the board, and Noel Walton who designed it and wrote the names on it.

The Boone County Homemakers Association sponsored the project. Funds were raised by donations from citizens. Mrs. Sam Sleet, New Haven, headed the committee who devoted hours of work and time to bring the project to a successful conclusion. Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent served on the committee in an advisory capacity. The printed programs for he dedication acknowledged the assistance of Judge Cropper and other county officials who cooperated throughout the project.

Other members of the Homemakers Committee were: Mrs. R. C. Garrison, Mrs. Geo. Kottmyer, Mrs. John Boyer, Mrs. Albert Willis, Mrs. Robt Clore, Mrs. Jonas Stephenson, Mrs. Thomas Goodridge, Mrs. Oscar Fugate, Mrs. John Hempfling, Mrs. Geo. Morith, Mrs. Sterling Dickey, Mrs. J. L. Feagan, Mrs Walter Renaker, Mrs. Ora Fry, Mrs. J. B. Berkshire.

SPECIAL NOTE: Several names were turned in to the committee Sunday and there are others who have been omitted from the roll because they have not come to the attention of the committee. Citizens of Boone County do not want a single hero to pass unhonored. Turn in any name that is not listed, it is every person's responsibility!

Mrs. Moore has extra copies of the Dedication program which may be obtained upon request.

WFA Promises Harvest Machinery

"We will do our best to see that more harvesting machinery is ready by the time it is needed", is the crux of a telegram from Chester Davis, Director of the War Food Administration received today by M. D. Royse, chairman of the Kentucky AAA and USDA War Board.

"This is the most important planting season in American history", the communication continued. "We can still increase the number of acres we plant. In a very few days it will be too late. The War Food Administration will work for continuing price supports at fair levels in order to minimize risks. We ask farmers to take an extra degree of chance this year for their country . . . to plant in full the acreage they can expect to handle under the most favorable circumstances ! !

M. D. Royse encouraged all farmers not only to increase the number of acres to be planted but to encourage neighboring farmers to produce to the limit.

"This is no time for hesitancy", Royse stated. "The farmers of Kentucky can be proud of some of the most fertil land in the Nation. Now is the time for them to use this land for complete all-out war production ! !

Soy Bean Meal Secured Thru CCC

Soybean meal and other protein supplements have been most difficult for local dairymen and farmers to secure according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. In fact it has in recent months been practically impossible to secure these protein suplements.

Arrangements have recently been completed where 41% soybean meal can be secured through the Commodity Credit Corporation in car load lots at around $47.00 per ton F. . B. car at Erlanger and at Walton. One car was unloaded at Walton the past week and another is due at Erlanger in the very near future.

Despite the price being slightly higher than home local dealers, ceiling prices soybean meal remains one of the best feed buys on the market. Large parts of all protein supplements in dairy, poultry and hog rations are now made up of soybean meal.

Soybean meal fed to hogs in a dry lot equals 625 pounds of corn, while for hogs on pasture it will save 350 pounds of corn. Plenty of water, salt and mineral mixture of 20 pounds of salt and 80 pounds of ground limestone should be available to stock at all times.

Farmers who wish to be included in the car shipment that is to arrive in the near future, should contact John E. Crigler, Mark Cook, J. C. Acree or one of the clerks at the county agricultural office in Burlington.

PORTRAIT OF MOTHER

By ANNE CAMPBELL

Her voice has lost the melody
Of youth. It quavers and is weak,
But when her sons come home from sea,
How firmly she will speak!

Her hair is white, but in the sun,
Like a bright halo it will shine,
When to her arms tired children run,
Restoring home's design.

Her eyes are dim, but when her boys
Come marching home, they will be deep
With many long remembered joys.
For gladness she will weep.

Her step is slow, but when her tall
Boys lift the latch, with eager pace
She will run down the spacious hall,
A light upon her face!

Gasoline Coupons Must Be Endorsed

Motorists in Boone County were urged by R. E. Brugh, chairman of the Local War Price and Rationing Board, to endorse their gasoline coupons in advance and thus avoid the inconvenience and delay, both to them and to their dealers, of having to do so at the filling station when they buy gasoline.

Failure to make proper notations on the back of coupons before gasoline is delivered constitutes a violation of the milage rationing regulatons, R. E. Brugh pointed out.

"License numbers and the abbreviation of the state should be written on the backs of all coupons before going to the station, or when the book is issued. This will save the time of the motorists and the attendants who must otherwise take the time to do his for each transaction. Without this endorsement, the filling stations are not to accept coupons," the ration board chairman explained.

"While this write-in requirement may seem burdensome, it is a valuable weapon in the hands of the Office of Price Administration in combatting black market gasoline transactions.

"We must remember the reason for gasoline rationing—to conserve our tires by controlling milage, to make them last until new one can be produced," added R. E. Brugh. "We must not overlook any means of safegaurding the miles available in our tires for those who need car transportation in doing essential war jobs.

Boone County Heavily Overscribes Goal of 474,000.00 In The Second War Loan Drive.

At the close of business May 1st the individual subscriptions of individuals amounted to $553,979.00 in the Second War Loan Drive. 1363 individual subscribers have the honor of raising this $553,979.00 individual amount.

This is the greatest amount of money ever raised in Boone County in any war dfive and is almost twice as much as was raised in the Fourth Liberty Loan Drive in the last war, which was the largest amount raised in any one drive in the last war.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Final Battle in Campaign for Tunisia Marked by Fierce Enemy Resistance; Allies Strive to Reunite Reds, Poles; Labor Front Studies Coal Mine Issues

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

TUNISIA:
Slow but Sure

Meeting fierce fire, Allied troops fought methodically to the approaches of the Axis' final two bastions in Tunisia, Tunis and Bizerte.

While French and American forces pressed against rocky Axis entrenchments in the north, and British units contained the enemy in the mountains in the south, the Allied First army's armored columns fought German tanks in the plains in the central sector.

Driving the Axis from Long Stop hill, the First army cleared the road leading to the Tunis plain to the east. A little to the south, First army formations shot it out with German tanks in flat country, then swung off toward the Axis' vital central sector base of Pont du Fahs, which was rapidly encircled.

Resisting bitterly, the Axis was giving up territory by the foot only, relying on mortar and machine gun fire to stop Allied infantry advancing under cover of massed artillery barrage. Using freighters and motor barges, the Axis continued to run the gantlet of scathing Allied bombers in the Sicilian straits in an effort to keep their embattled troops supplied.

Helmet Saves General

Only a helmet saved the life of Lieut. Gen. Lesley J. McNair, leader of American ground forces, as shell fragmentation struck him down while on observation on the Tunisian front during the bitter fighting. Although fragmentation glanced off the helmet, particles ripped into the general's shoulder, injuring him painfully. Lieut. Gen. Ben Lear has assumed his position pending his recovery.

RUSSIA:
Break With Poles

Charging that the Polish government in exile was using Nazi propaganda in order to force territorial concessions from the Russians, the Reds formally broke diplomatic relations with the Poles. In consultation with the United States, British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden immediately got to work patching up the rupture.

Immediate cause of the break was centered around the Nazi charge that they had uncovered the graves of 10,000 Polish army officers near Smolensk, allegedly murdered by the Reds before they were driven from the area. The Poles asked the International Red Cross to investigate the charge. Polish officials said that they have been unable to locate the officers despite a general amnesty granted Polish prisoners of war by the Russian government.

At the same time there were indications of another diplomatic break, this one between the United States and Finland. Withdrawal of American embassy officials from Helsingfors reputedly followed Finland's declination of a U. S. offer to mediate her war with Russia.

Catch Breath

Russian troops held against Nazi attacks in the Leningrad area and Red airmen continued to pepper German supply lines along the whole front. Minor action was reported above Kursk, where the Reds are wedged into Nazi lines, and at Novorossisk, the Germans' big base on the Black sea shore in the Caucasus.

POISON GAS:
Nazis Prepare

For the last two months, the German people have been drilled against poison gas attacks.

This information reached Allied sources in the wake of Great Britain's warning that she would use poison gas against Germany should the Nazis start such warfare in Russia.

According to reports, fire fighting squadrons in Germany were instructed on the effects of gas.

SOFT COAL:
Labor Showdown

John L. Lewis forced a showdown on the government's war labor policies.

Backed up by approximately 450,000 members of the United Mine Workers, Big John demanded a $2 a day raise; an $8 minimum wage for all employees, and portal-to-portal pay, or, pay from the time a worker enters a mine to the time he leaves.

At stake was the President's "hold-the-line" order, based on the WLB's policy of granting a 15 per cent wage increase over January, 1941, rates. Lewis has opposed this formula from the beginning.

Although the UMW was committed to continue working until the end of last month many mines reported stoppages and slowdowns during the week preceding the deadline. UMW did not authorize the disruptions, but neither did officials order the workers to return to their jobs.

PRODUCTION:
Ships and Planes

Stating that American shipyards could produce 20 million tons of shipping a year, Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the U. S. Maritime Commission, has revealed that yards are constructing five vessels a day.

Land's announcement coincided with one made by Undersecretary of War Robert Patterson, in which he told the Atlanta War Effort committee that American aircraft manufacturers turned out 6,200 airplanes in March. Like Land, Patterson declared that many more planes could be produced if critical materials and men were available.

Deriding Nazi claims that they have sunk 30 million tons of Allied shipping since the start of the war, Land said our shipyards will produce almost 19 million tons this year. This will be greater than the rest of the world combined.

Patterson revealed that production of major items in the army supply program exclusive of aircraft will approximate $1,600,000,000 in April. This will be about 15 per cent greater than the January total.

ALEUTIANS:
No Picnic

Swirling mists and rains continued to hold up American bombings in the Aleutians. Although prepared to dump 50 tons of explosives on each trip over Attu and Kiska, weather has held U. S. fliers to a mere handful of raids.

Meanwhile, pilots report the Japs have succeeded in heavily fortifying the Aleutians. On recent flights over the islands, they have encountered strong anti-aircraft bursts, and airmen believe the Japs have deliberately withheld some of their fire.

Both Attu and Kiska have few suitable beaches upon which American troops could land, most of the shoreline being steep and craggy. The Japs have these few beaches thickly covered and aptly manned, remembering the Yanks' successful surprise landings at Guadalcanal.

Eight months ago, the army said the Japs probably had 10,000 men stationed in the Aleutians. Airmen believe that these troops have since been strongly reinforced. Summed up: American observers believe the battle of the Aleutians will be a big one, and no picnic.

RAF:
Bombs Rip Duisberg

Seventeen bombers failed to return following the RAF's heavy raid on the important German industrial center of Duisberg.

Over 1,000 tons of explosives were dumped on Duisberg, famous for its engine works, as the RAF returned to the wars after bombing Stettin, Rostock and Berlin.

Meanwhile, RAF bombers continued to attack Nazi communications centers.

RATIONING:
More Tires, More Gas

Because of the increased quota of tires for civilians, OPA has amended its gas rationing regulations outside of the 17 eastern seaboard states and the District of Columbia.

Following Rubber Administrator William Jeffers' announcement that more Grade A tires would be available for essential use, the OPA boosted the maximum allotment of gas for occupational driving from 470 to 720 gallons per month. The figure is based on an average of 15 miles per gallon of gas.

Formerly, only doctors, ministers and some classes of salesmen received the cherished "C" card allowing 720 miles for occupational driving. Average allotments on "B" cards approximated 470 miles. Now "C" cards will be available on application, showing all traveling will be done on jobs, or the car is being used to transport three or more persons to war industry.

The OPA also ruled that rationing certificates for replacing tires on farm tractors may be issued by local boards in areas where recapping facilities are inadequate.

SHIPPING:
Allied Losses

The Allies suffered a net loss of one million tons of merchant shipping in 1942, the navy department reported.

The "net" figure was arrived at after deducting losses from existing fleets and new construction during the year. The navy declared, however, that figures were incomplete, since building records were not received from some of the Allied nations.

In announcing the losses, the navy pointed out that they included submarine sinkings, mines, airplanes, capture and otherwise. According to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, submarines accounted for 50 per cent of the losses.

The navy's statement followed a report by the Truman defense investigating committee that 12 million tons of Allied merchant shipping had been sunk during the year.

CHINA:
Fight in Mountains

Forty thousand Japanese assaulted the Chinese army's positions in the mountain range flanking the Pieping-Hankow railroad.

Both sides suffered heavy losses as the Chinese resisted fiercely in the passes and on the heights.

The Chinese also reported throwing back two Japanese attempts to land along the China sea coast. The first attempt found troops trying to reach the beach under cover of a lone warship's fire. But when Chinese cannon forced a withdrawal, the Japs returned the next day with four warships. Again heavy fire frustrated a landing.

Meanwhile, American airmen were active over China, combatting Japanese fighter planes from an advanced Allied base in Hunan province.

NEW HORIZON:
'Old Capitalism Dead'

"The capitalism of complete laissez-faire which thrived on low wages and maximum profits for minimum turnover, which rejected collective bargaining and fought against justified public regulation of the competitive process is a thing of the past."

No words of a soap-box orator these, but rather the keynote of an address made by Eric A. Johnston, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, at the initial session of the chamber's 31st annual meeting.

Continuing, Johnston said: "Political and economic freedom are integrated, and that what impairs one also hampers the other in like measure. The horizons of opportunity being opened up are larger than ever before."

SHELTER IN TUNISIA

Protected from the burning sun by a solar helmet commandeered from an Axis prisoner, this American corporal relaxes in his foxhole in central Tunisia. His dog keeps him from getting too lonely.

MISCELLANY:

FUEL OIL: American Liberators bombed the huge Thilawa oil refinery south of Rangoon, scoring hits on the distillation and storage installations.

DRAFT FATHERS: Secretary of War Henry Stimson said drafting of fathers was necessary, if the army was to take advantage of the opportunities offered for speedily ending the war.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND

By DREW PEARSON

Washington, D. C.

OVERSEAS LETTERS

Many an American mother is hearing from her boy: "Why don't you write? I haven't had a letter from home for ages." And she knows she has written faithfully every day.

The explanation is the U-boat, which the war department regrets to say caused the loss of "several million pieces of mail" during the first three weeks of March alone.

But still the mother wonders why some of her daily letters don't get through. Even if a third of them were sunk her boy should have received 20 letters in the month.

Unfortunately, it doesn't work that way. If she writes 30 letters a month all those letters may have accumulated in the Port of New York or some other port waiting for a convoy outward bound. Convoys cannot leave every day or two. So all 30 letters might go into one ship and if that ship is sunk her son will have no mail for a month.

There is no solution to this problem except to keep on writing.

COLONEL HOBBY ROSE

Col. Oveta Culp Hobby of the WAACs picked up the telephone one bright morning and called Col. William Slater of the war department's public relations branch.

"Good morning, colonel," she said.

"Good morning, colonel," he replied.

"Colonel," she said, "I have been told by a large seed company that they want to name a rose after me. What would you think of my lending my name to a rose—the Hobby rose?"

That was a new one for the colonel. He chuckled, laughed it off, and suggested that horticultural problems were out of his line.

In the end, the two colonels decided the question was too thorny to handle.

RUBBER FROM OIL REFINERIES

It has now been more than a year since far-sighted Oil Co-ordinator Ickes urged that synthetic rubber be made by converting small oil refineries, closed by gasoline rationing, instead of building the monstrous new rubber factories which will not be finished until 1944 and which require millions of tons of precious steel and copper.

After long delays the first of these converted small refineries will begin making rubber on May 1. It is the Eastern States Petroleum Refinery at Houston, Texas, and the results promise to be astounding.

Not a single new steel vessel, pump, tank, or piece of piping, so badly needed for escort vessels by the navy, have been used. Furthermore, the total new material of other types amounts to only 20 per cent of the cost of the entire job.

However, this Eastern States plant will produce in 12 months enough butadiene to make 2,000,000 tires, plus ingredients for several thousand tons of high octane gasoline per day.

Also, because it was not necessary to build new walls, roofs, equipment, this converted refinery will produce butadiene at a cost equivalent to a little over $1 per tire, based on the investment.

BRITISH DEMOCRACY

A great deal is being written on the question "What are we fighting for?" but if the American public had looked in on the Servicemen's Canteen of the National Press club on a recent Saturday afternoon, they wouldn't have to be told.

One of the guests was a British naval officer, Rear Admiral S. R. Dight, famed in the British navy for his toughness in battle, and the saltiness of his sea yarns. At the Press Club canteen, he more than justified this latter reputation to American soldiers, sailors and marines who flocked around him.

However, it wasn't until the party was about to break up that the admiral came into his own.

It isn't every day that an admiral, British or American, joins a songfest with gobs and soldiers, but Admiral Dight sang popular American airs with gust and enthusiasm for half an hour.

Finally an American sailor called out: "Let's sing this one for the admiral—For He's a Jolly Good Fellow!"

What followed was probably the lustiest rendition of that familiar tune ever heard in the nation's capital. More than 100 soldiers, sailors and marines joined in the tribute to Admiral Dight, who looked almost as happy as if he had just won a naval battle. It was one of the things we are fighting for—democracy.

CAPITAL CHAFF

Some men cool their heels for a month before getting a seat . . . Nation's Railroads Move 50,000 Troops Each Day

Special Surveys Decrease Cross Hauling; Developments Abroad May Force Unexpected Shifting of Troops.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Recently I had to make seven consecutive week-end trips between Washington and New York—I left Washington after a late Friday broadcast and had to return Monday for one at noon. Not once was I able to get reservations for the return trip until at the last minute when some unused space was turned in.

If I groused a little too loudly over this, it may have been because I didn't know then what I learned officially only the other day; namely, that "if the war department insisted in having all the Pullman equipment it could use, all the Pullman cars of the country would be carrying troops."

In other words, if Johnny Doughboy didn't step aside occasionally, we'd all use coaches or walk.

Compromise

The present arrangement is said to be a compromise in recognition of essential civilian needs. At present, a million and three-quarter soldiers are being moved a month—that is 50,000 a day—in America's trains in official troop movements. This does not include the many men on leave.

There are, of course, movements of whole divisions with full equipment but these are the exceptions. As you have probably noticed if you travel very much, there are usually a few cars containing troops attached to your passenger train. This is the way most of the troops are transported—in small groups of 250 or less. However, that is a considerable addition to the regular passenger traffic.

It's said a soldier eats twice as much as he did in civilian life and that is one reason why food has to be rationed to civilians. But he travels a lot more in proportion to his normal civilian peregrinations. Many a man saw his first big city when he reached London or Cairo or New Delhi. I know a pilot who dropped in at the airport here recently and had several hours waltover. When he was asked why he didn't cross the bridge and look the capital over, he said he'd never been in a big city and didn't want to get lost. The next thing heard from this particular was that he was in Calcutta.

Average Number

In the last war, the average number of moves made by a soldier were three. Here is a list of typical moves he makes in this war, drawn up by the Office of War Information:

1. To the induction center
2. To reception center
3. To replacement training center
4. To his particular branch of service
5. To big maneuvers
6. Return
7. To special training areas
8. To port of embarkation

Special studies are made to cut down unnecessary cross-hauling but sudden developments abroad may force soldiers who are located near one port to be shifted to another far away. Or a special need for particularized training may arise and that may force men to be doubled back to desert or mountain for the specialized practice in snow or under a hot sun that new requirements make necessary.

Maneuvers in the southeast and southwest, including the desert training areas of California, have sometimes required the moving in of as many as 300,000 men within a few weeks, equipment and all. Naturally, that disrupted a large part of passenger traffic for several weeks at a time.

Unessential Travel

Efforts are being made to cut down extra passenger travel by discouraging conventions, trade shows, big sports contests and other gatherings. One exception has been made, and that is the lecturer. Even the President saw fit to come out with a statement encouraging the continuation of the work of lecture bureaus. He expressed himself to Lowell Thomas, who traveled to Washington, on that subject—the plea for a good word for the speaker. Thomas represented many people who do considerable public speaking. I know how difficult it is. I, myself, have been unable to accept lecture dates because it is so difficult to be certain of connections and a broadcaster has to move with the regularity of a train schedule—a train schedule in peace time—the microphone waits for no man.

There have been rumors of late that transportation was snagged; that because of the U-boats, supplies were piling up on the docks and loaded freight cars were jamming the yards and causing congestion. But the Office of War Information says that latest advices indicate that congestion is being lessened. In fact, the official word is: "The battle of transportation . . . at a crisis at Pearl Harbor time . . . is now being won."

Nearing Limit

I hope that this statement isn't over-optimistic. As a matter of fact, the reservation is noted that "the victories are not necessarily permanent. Our transportation equipment, with few exceptions, is being used close to its limits"—and there remain two situations which are not satisfactory, one is movement of oil and the other is the problem of getting the war workers to and from work.

The latter difficulty is responsible, according to some investigators, for much of the recently decried absenteeism.

To get an idea of what the traffic has to bear in a city where war industries are concentrated, there has been an increase of use of the Detroit street railway systems of 76.9 per cent. The Baltimore transit line is up 90 per cent and the Washington, 131 per cent. I know what these figures mean as does anyone who has to make his way to and from work in the capital. I have also seen that fabulous city of San Diego, once a pleasant, sleepy town which seemed to move lazily with the pelicans that flew over the bay or the whispering palms. The pelicans have been replaced by planes and it's a 24-hour town, with a 336 per cent increase in the use of its busses and trolley cars.

Diary of a Broadcaster

Today I made it from bedside to desk in one hour and 18 minutes, including the time to make my own breakfast of coffee, poached eggs, grapefruit and zwieback (my wife is away) also to traverse on foot some 13 Washington blocks. I think that this record is not bad considering the variety of activities included. I managed to hear the early five-minute newscast and scanned the headlines which told me whether the news wind was blowing in the same direction this morning that it was last night when the newspapers went to bed—in other words, was I to plow fresh fields or harveat what I could from the old ones.

I also removed the blanket that shields our three parakeets from northern drafts and waited for the welcoming chirrup that one, the least snobbish of the three, condescends to give me before I leave the room. As soon as I do, they all burst into song.

Walking to work in Washington these days is like reviewing the armies of the United Nations for one can spot almost any uniform between Dupont Circle and Pennsylvania avenue. But it seems that the WAVES are in the preponderance. The WAACs are smart but the navy has a uniform that is a little bit less drab than the olive. It is surprising how an elderly matron turns out in that navy blue-and-gold as smart as a midshipman.

Washington's springtime, one of its two beautiful seasons, is here in April—gone in May. First, the forsythia burns with its yellow flame; then the magnolias blush and fade, and the dogwoods raise their sweet ghostliness among their darker aisters; then the cherry blossoms come—and there are many of them scattered over the city as well as the better advertised ones along the lagoon. Soon they are followed by leaves on the oaks and the elms and the maples. Then backyards are brilliant with the rambler roses and you know that spring is done.

Radios Plane Trouble

A new device automatically radios the performance of 70 different parts of a plane during a test flight to a ground machine which records the data on sound film and disks, and then makes graphs for visual study in a matter of seconds, says Collier's. Thus it not only enables the ground men to warn pilots of incipient trouble, but its records check and supplement those of the pilot and are not lost in case of a crackup.

SPEAKING of SPORTS
by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

SAD as it may seem to a large number of American league baseball followers, the chances for a wide-open pennant race are almost non-existent.

Red Rolfe

For a while it looked like the Browns, the Red Sox or someone else would throw a bomb into Joe McCarthy's long reign. The Yankees have lost Joe DiMaggio, Tommy Henrich, Phil Rizzuto, Red Rolfe, Buddy Hassett, Red Ruffing and several others.

Obviously the Yankees of 1943 couldn't be the team of old. Too many good men were gone. But just take a look at what they have left—it's still quite a ball club.

The Yankees should have the best pitching staff in the American league. No other team in the circuit can match Ernie Bonham, Atley Donald, Hank Borowy, Marvin Bruer, Spud Chandler and the others McCarthy has on hand. It isn't reasonable to assume that the club will manage to hang on to all of its pitchers during the season, but Bonham, Chandler and Borowy, unless called to other fields, should be good for a minimum of 60 victories.

The tougher job comes when you try to evaluate the remaining entries. But here's how we figure they'll finish the current season:

AMERICAN LEAGUE

New York	Detroit
Boston	Chicago
St. Louis	Washington
Cleveland	Philadelphia

The second-place choice is the disturbing factor. Back of the Yankees are four clubs which might move into the No. 2 spot. We finished second for the fourth time in the past five years last season, winning 93 and losing 59. But their pitching is going to be good.

Hottest Team

The Browns were the hottest team in the loop last year and have a driving manager in Luke Sewell. They finished in third place last year with 82 wins and 69 losses. It was the first Brownie team to wind up in the first division since 1929. This year's team appears strong.

Lon Boudreau, youngest manager in the major leagues, believes his Cleveland Indians have better than a fair chance of winning the pennant. But his opinion isn't shared by other managers and experts. Lou is banking on what he sincerely believes is as good a pitching staff as there is in the league.

Quite a few sports writers figure the Indians for third place. Of 74 writers conducting a recent poll, six voted Cleveland first place honors, 16 placed them second and 27 booked them for third place. The remaining votes were from fourth to seventh place.

Prospects for the Tigers aren't too bright, although Dick Wakefield, former Beaumont outfielder, may give the team a necessary shot in the arm. Wakefield, who hit .345 last season, is counted on for a regular outfield berth.

Trouble Ahead

The White Sox are going to have more than their share of trouble this season. The team has 24 players in the armed forces and six others remaining on jobs in essential industries. Still, it's a season in which anything can happen. Jimmy Dykes, White Sox boss, may not have been whistling to keep up his courage when he said that "any team able to put nine men on the field all year has a chance to win the championship."

One thing is fairly sure during these times of trouble and uncertainty—the Washington Senators and the Philadelphia Athletics are not figured as contenders for the flag.

The Senators finished in seventh place last year and, unhappily, most sports writers are enthusiastic in relegating them to the same spot in 1943. The team has little pitching and practically no infield. It does have a hard-hitting outfield including Bob Johnson, former Athletic slugger. But it takes more than a good outfield to win pennants.

Philadelphia was the next thing to a unanimous choice for the cellar spot. Sixty-one of 74 writers participating in the Associated Press survey voted the Athletics eighth. Connie Mack begins his 43rd year as manager of the A's with a team that won only 55 and lost 99 last year. Suffice it to say that the team is weak in all departments.

Unquestionably the Yankees are still the team to beat. And at this moment it appears unlikely that any team will beat them, unless a minor miracle takes place at an early date.

Of course no one can say what the draft will do to ball clubs. But, granting that all teams will share equally the blows which may fall on them, the fact remains that the Yankees have just about as much winning margin as they held last spring.

And that is enough to give them the American league pennant.

King's Messenger Returns to Horse

LONDON. — King George VI, sponsoring a save-gasoline campaign, has returned to the horse-and-buggy days.

A horse-drawn broughsm, driven by a liveried coachman wearing a black cocked hat, now is used to carry the king's messengers bearing documents and communications.

U. S. Seizes 50,000 Nazi-Held Patents

American Manufacturers Given Use of Formulas To Aid War Effort.

WASHINGTON. — Axis assets in this country are:

1. Being used in the war effort against the Axis.

2. Being handled in such a way that the Axis never will get hold of them again.

3. The potentially richest—50,000 German-held patents—are to become permanent property of the American people, the government promises.

The haul in physical and real property runs into billions of dollars, according to the alien property custodian here in Washington.

In one operation, for instance, the United States is taking over and Americanizing such German assets as the American branches of the Nazi industrial colossus, I. G. Farbenindustrie Aktiengesellschaft, commonly known as I. G. Farben.

In the last war the Germans had world-wide monopolies on dyestuffs and other essentials through this and other organizations.

Then, as now, the United States took over the factories and patents and secret processes where they could be learned, but after the war, the Germans—intent on reconstructing their monopolies through an international cartel system—were allowed to buy up certain companies to which these assets had been turned over.

Won't Happen Again.

Uncle Sam says he doesn't intend to let that happen again.

Patents are being licensed to American manufacturers for the normal life of the patent, but there are no exclusive licenses.

The alien property custodian, Leo T. Crowley, further pledges that "We shall take all steps within our power to make certain that vested (seized) enemy patents are made available forever to American industry."

The United States has seized German - controlled companies which make such items as sulfa drugs, biologicals, dyes and photographic materials.

The navy now is operating an airplane factory in New Jersey seized from the Germans. Former German chemical companies are producing nitrates in New York state and borax and potash in California.

Seized Axis holdings vary from Japanese-owned grocery stores and fruit farms to the huge interests of Fritz von Opel of the German automobile manufacturing family. Von Opel's property included a brewery, a chain of service stations, a tank car company, and two holding corporations.

Confiscate 29 Axis Ships.

Atabrine, the quinine substitute, was German-controlled.

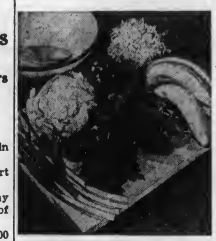
Then there were 29 Axis ships—28 Italian and one German—which we seized. We got no Japanese ships, but took over important stocks of silk, Japanese investments and bank deposits, and even a few Japanese patents. An entire steel mill for a specialized purpose, ready for shipment to Japan, was seized in this country.

The German patents, particularly, often represented the latest developments in their fields.

Many of these German patents involve secret operations, but there are others like a new type of steel concrete reinforcement with twisted metal, instead of our knobbed kind, together with a new process of pre - testing reinforced concrete. There are fuel injectors, and machine tools like the one that enables us to turn out faster the giant crankshafts for big marine Diesel engines.

The Japanese patents seized by our government run mostly to cheap processes of making electrical goods.

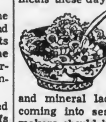
Firemen Raise Pigs in Heart of City of London



LONDON.—On the site of a bombed-out shop in Berners street where the clergy used to buy their vestments, there live today 32 healthy, grunting pigs.

The explanation of this farm-yard in the heart of London is that the members of the Berners street fire station next door decided to help the food situation by raising a bit of bacon in their spare time. At least one of the firemen kept pigs for many years previously.

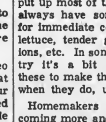
The pigsties were constructed out of bricks and timber from the bombed-out houses in the district and food was obtained by the firemen taking turns at touring the neighborhood canteens and hotels for scraps. There hasn't been any shortage yet—nor a shortage of pigs, either, for in 10 months the firemen have raised 50 to 60 porkers.



Put Health Into Menus With Vitamins Plus

Crisp greens give you plenty of vitamin A, B and C. Assemble them in your salads and get plenty of health insurance—you don't need points to shop for these.

What's the pep appeal of your meals these days? It should be better than ever before with spring vegetables dotting the markets colorfully in greens, yellows and reds. Many vitamin and mineral laden fruits are just coming into season so you homemakers should have no trouble getting your quota of two fruits, two vegetables and a citrus fruit into your family's diets.



In winter it is sometimes extremely difficult to meet that nutrition requirement because of the scarcity of vegetables and fruits and their consequent high prices. Now, though prices are higher than last year at this time, they are abundant, and most of us can afford to spend the extra money required to buy them.

Perhaps, you have a garden this year. You're probably planning to put up most of the produce, but you always have some crops available for immediate consumption such as lettuce, tender green shoots of onions, etc. In some parts of the country it's a bit early for some of these to make their appearance, but when they do, up and at them!

Homemakers are fortunately becoming more and more conscious of the importance of fruits and vegetables in the diet, and the more so they become, the more healthy will become each generation of Americans. Even those of you who have been deficient in these foods during the growing years will get much benefit from including these foods in your diet. A heavy meal calls for the light, crisp, "just right" feeling which fruits and vegetables supply.

Remember vitamins and minerals work hand in hand to give your body health and to keep it in good workable order. Most vegetables have many of both minerals and vitamins. It is interesting to know that greens (lettuce, parsley, watercress, turnip greens, etc.) are rich not only in iron that makes for good, rich blood, but also in vitamin A which promotes good health of skin, eyes, and keeps you buoyant and full of energy. The greens get a nice big star for being rich in Vitamin C, necessary for health of teeth and bones, and for quick healing of wounds.

Don't be surprised when the greens come in for a nice share of honors for vitamin B_2 also. That's the vitamin necessary for normal nutrition.

Easiest way to keep most of the vitamins intact is to serve the vegetables raw—as you would in a salad. The same goes for fruits. Don't let either of them soak in water or stand uncovered in the refrigerator—the vitamins seem to evaporate quickly, especially in the case of vitamin C, so easily lost by cooking or leaving exposed to air.

Lynn Says:

Fresh as a Day in May: So will be your foods if you keep them properly refrigerated. Desserts to cool you off and keep your appetites unjaded, if they're to be frozen, belong right in the freezer. Meats and fish are safest kept right under the freezer in a meat-keeper if you have one.

Milk, cream and beverages are stood along side the freezer unit. Custards, puddings, butter and staples fill the middle section nicely, are easy to get at.

Leftovers, foods prepared ahead, salads, some fruits and berries are well refrigerated when kept on one of the lower shelves. The humidor or crisper means just that for it keeps those fresh fruits and vegetables crisp and well refrigerated.

The storage bin at the bottom of the refrigerator is usually non-refrigerated, and gives splendid storage to cereals, crackers and extra beverages.

Keeping vegetables well refrigerated insures at least a good degree of vitamin preservation. Keep them covered, too!

Cottage Cheese-Vegetable Salad.
(Serves 6 to 8)

2 cups cottage cheese
1 garlic clove (optional)
1 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons chopped chives or green onion
2 tablespoons chopped pimiento
¼ cup chopped celery
Paprika
2 cucumbers
1 medium sized onion
2 large tomatoes
2 carrots
French dressing
Salad greens

Rub mixing bowl with clove of garlic. Add cottage cheese, salt, and paprika. Fold in chopped chives, pimiento, celery. Turn into a bowl that has been rinsed with cold water. Chill in refrigerator. Unmold on center of large salad plate, surround with watercress, thin cucumber slices, onion rings, carrot flowers, tomato wedges. Serve with french dressing.

A salad bowl that's popping full of health with its tomato slices (vitamin C) lettuce (vitamins A and C) bananas (A, B, C), green peppers (A and very much C).

Here's a vegetable that makes a main dish when combined with macaroni:

Green Pepper Stuffed With Macaroni.
(Serves 6)

6 green peppers
1 cup cooked, elbow macaroni
½ pound grated American cheese
1 cup soft bread crumbs
¼ teaspoon worcestershire sance
¼ teaspoon salt

Cut a slice from top of green pepper, scoop out, and cook in boiling salted water for 5 minutes. Drain. Mix remaining ingredients, saving ½ of cheese for top. Fill peppers with mixture, stand upright in pan and sprinkle remaining cheese over top. Bake in a moderate oven 25 minutes.

Jaded appetites will respond quickly if you serve this delectable cool pudding:

Orangeade Refrigerator Pudding.
(Serves 9)

1 tablespoon gelatin
¼ cup cold water
1½ cups orange juice
½ cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 egg whites
¼ cup sugar
4 cups oven popped rice cereal
½ cup melted butter
¼ cup sugar

Soften gelatin in cold water. Heat orange juice, sugar and salt to boiling point. Add softened gelatin and stir until dissolved. Add lemon juice and cool. When mixture begins to thicken, fold in stiffly beaten egg whites to which sugar has been added.

Crush cereal crumbs fine and mix with melted butter and sugar. Distribute evenly in bottom of a square pan and press down firmly. Pour in orange mixture. Chill in refrigerator. Cut in squares when firm, and serve with whole orange slices and whipped cream, if desired.

WHEN Director King Vidor began telling Brian Donlevy about Ellis Island, the day Brian did his first scenes for "America," he replied "Bet I know more about Ellis Island than you do." Seems that in 1911 he returned to the United States from Ireland with his mother; unaware that she had to pay a head tax before being re-admitted, she'd spent all her money. A phone call to her husband in Sheboygan Falls, Wis., would have settled the matter. But as she had a hot Irish temper, she insisted on arguing with all the officials. "So they put us in a corner and ignored us until Mother cooled off," said Donlevy. "That was two days later!"

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Chewing gum and rubber trees have something in common. They both are the products of latex-bearing trees. The chicle latex, from which chewing gum is made, has a high resin and low rubber content. Rubber latex has the reverse characteristics. Chicle and Castillos rubber trees are found in much the same areas in Central America.

Synthetic rubber tractor tires have been under tests by B. F. Goodrich engineers for close to a year. When synthetic rubber becomes available in sufficient quantities, farmers may expect such tires on their tractors.

A Russian rubber-bearing plant is now being successfully grown in the United States. Its value in the American rubber program, however, is still undetermined.

Tire recapping has proved its wartime value. But the recapping should be done before the tread rubber of the tire is completely worn.

AMERICAN RAILROADS

"We are in the very midst of the most gigantic task of national defense the nation has ever experienced and in which, as never before, transportation looms gigantic and is no less essential than the very armed forces themselves."—Hon. J. Monroe Johnson, Member, Interstate Commerce Commission.

—o—

"There is no underselling the job that our boys are doing, nor the task that industry is performing. At the same time, we of the transportation world are justly proud of the fact that we are the pivot around which the whole war effort revolves. In other words, transportation is to the war effort what the blood stream is to the body. . . . . I shudder to think what would happen to our war effort today if the chaotic conditions existed that prevailed during World War I — under government operation of transportation when private enterprise was scuttled."—R. A. McCaffrey, Traffic Manager, U. S. Pipe and Foundry Company, Birmingham, Ala.

"Unquestionably, the first essential to this nation in the winning of the war is the securing and training of sufficient manpower and the production of adequate supplies for the armed forces of both this country and our allies. Surely, the second essential is adequate transportation, for troops and material are of little value if they cannot be transported to the points where and when they are most needed. Everyone concedes that thus far the transportation system of the country, particularly the railroads, has done a splendid job."—Hon Claude R. Porter, Member, Interstate Commerce Commission.

High tribute was paid to the more than 40,000 Southern Railway System employees for their all-out war effort in a current statement issued by Ernest E. Norris, the Southern's president.

"Every Southern railroader has become a soldier—every Southern car and locomotive has become a weapon of war — every transportation job, a chance to hasten America's day of final Victory", is the way Mr. Norris put it.

"Rain and shine, day and night, troop trains and war freight—tank cars of precious oil and passenger trains—are rolling continuously and swiftly on the Southern Railway."

That's why the men and women who are working on the railroads are tired when they go home from the job these days. "They are tired — and proud of it", says Mr. Norris, "because they know that the work they are doing so well today is paving the way for the new and greater Southland that lies beyond the Victory they're helping to win."

". . . . . At the present time the railroad plant is not only an implement of war but an indispensable one and should be so maintained and equipped as to be capable of performing any needed task."—Hon. Carroll Miller, Member, Interstate Commerce Commission.

—o—

"A comparision of the overall traffic of the railways in 1942 with that of 1917 shows that, although operating with less equipment over fewer miles of track, the ton-miles of revenue freight increased 58 percent, and the passenger miles increased almost 25 percent. This has been accomplished by running longer trains, by moving them faster, by loading cars more heavily, and by reducing the time which cars are permitted to spend on sidings unde rload or empty."—Col. E. C. R. Lasher, Deputy Chief, Traffic Control Division, Army Transportation Corps.

—o—

". . . The railroads are accomplishing wonders to meet their war obligations."—Macon, Ga., Telegraph.

...not if you take good care of your
VACUUM CLEANER

Beating rugs by hand is hard on you and hard on your rugs, but it's your only alternative if you allow your cleaner to become damaged beyond repair. Here are a few hints on how to keep it in A-1 operating condition:

TIPS ON CLEANER CARE

- Empty dust bag every time cleaner is used. Dust in bag reduces suction.
- Avoid running cleaner over pins, nails, coins and other hard objects. Pick them up by hand.
- Keep brushes free from lint, hair and threads. Clean after each use.
- If cleaner is not picking up threads, check belt to see if it is turning brush. Increase tension or replace belt if necessary.
- Be sure that brush is properly adjusted. Bristles should extend about one-eighth inch below nozzle.
- Coil cord loosely on hooks. Pulling too tightly may break wires inside insulation where cord bends over hooks.
- Disconnect cord by grasping plug at outlet. Do not yank cord or you may damage connections.
- Follow manufacturer's instructions on cleaning and oiling. Consult your dealer if you have lost directions.

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. After Pearl Harbor, Lieut. Bulkeley orders Lieut. Kelly to take three of the boats to Bataan, where they set up headquarters. Kelly has a badly gashed finger, but doesn't dare take time to go to the hospital, as things are moving fast. During the first big air raid the PT boats shot down three Jap dive bombers. Kelly is speaking.

CHAPTER III

"When Bulkeley got back he took one look at me and ordered me to the hospital at Corregidor. But when we got there they told us that beautiful big modern one-thousand-bed hospital had been abandoned. There it was, I don't know how much it had cost, as useless to us as a Buddhist monastery. The patients had all been moved down into one hundred beds in one of the tunnels in the Rock. I wasn't so delirious that I couldn't figure out why. Because with no aircraft or anti-aircraft protection, that big expensive topside hospital was just an unprotected target.

"The next I remember was down in the tunnel in the army hospital under Corregidor, the army doctor asking me what treatment I'd had as he cut the shirt off my back—it wouldn't come off over my hand any more.

"But the thing that impressed me most—even then—was the army nurses. There were fourteen of them on the Rock, and remember, I hadn't talked to a white woman since we sailed from the States. Heretofore, I hadn't paid much attention to women, but somehow the war and everything made a big difference.

"Or maybe it was Peggy herself, because she was a very cute kid. A brunette about medium height and very trim, but mostly it was her green eyes, I guess, and a cute way she had of telling you very firmly what you had to do, so that you grinned, but just the same you did it. She started right in hossing me around while she helped cut off my shirt.

"The whole army was listening in," said Bulkeley. "Don Bell, that Manila radio announcer who they say was shot by the Japs the first day they entered the city, was always encouraging. And even more so was KGEI from the American west coast, telling us we wouldn't be forgotten, that the people knew we were putting up a magnificent fight."

"It came at eleven at night," Bulkeley went on. "I had my three boats out there by 11:30. Funny thing, that old ship had been an aircraft carrier in the battle of Jutland—first boat ever to launch a plane in actual battle. She survives the whole German Imperial fleet and more than twenty years later ends up on an American mine halfway round the world.

"When we got there, survivors were so thick we didn't have to zigzag to pick them up—just went straight ahead and we got all we could handle, although there were cries coming out of the darkness all around. Finally our shoulders got so weak pulling them up the sea ladder that we couldn't lift them. So we'd throw lines out into the dark—it was like casting for trout—and haul them back with a dozen people hanging on. We'd just pull them on in—scraping off a few ears, and now and then a nose and plenty of skin, on the side of our boat—but they were drowning every minute and it was the only way. Our boat managed to rescue as many as 196. Had 'em lying and standing every place.

"But the queerest thing came at the end. The cries out in the darkness had almost stopped, and we were cruising for the crumbs when suddenly, out over the water, I heard someone whistling a tune I couldn't believe it. But we changed course, and presently came alongside an aviator. He'd been blown way out there along with three life belts. He'd put one of them under his feet, another under his head like a pillow, and the third under his behind. Had his hands comfortably folded on his stomach. He thanked us, said he couldn't swim, so he'd been whistling just to kill time until someone came along. Asked if there was anything he could do. That guy had plenty guts.

"Six of the survivors died before we could land them—exposure and burns."

"They began bringing them into my hospital before dawn," said Kelly. "One of them was a Filipino boy who'd been second engineer. He'd been burned all over except where his shorts had been, and he screamed horribly when they sprayed his burns. They'd put him in the stiff wagon, but an army doctor felt his pulse and said, 'Hell, that man's not dead,' so they sent him here. It hurt so bad to touch him when they had to turn him for spraying that he finally persuaded the nurses to lift him by the hair on his head.

"Meanwhile gloomy talk was getting me worried about the whole picture, and the next day the skipper here came in to see me—" said Lieut. R. B. Kelly; "they'd sent him over on courier duty. He was looking pretty grim. When I asked him about these rumors concerning the air corps, he said it had practically been annihilated—we only had six P-40's left, and that was why everything was going to hell. The Japs had wiped out Clark and Nichols Fields and also Iba, except for a few scattered planes. Also they had got seven of the navy's fourteen PBY's—clipped them off neatly when they had landed for gas. One of them had been the navy plane which hit Colin Kelly's battleship before he finally got it.

"Yet I couldn't see how they had done it, until a few days later when they began moving patients from the Manila hospital (it was the forerunner of evacuation, although we didn't guess that yet) into Corregidor. In the cot on my left was a Texas kid, a pilot from Clark Field. On the other side was an Ohio pilot from Iba. Texas was pretty sick, so the first night I shot the breeze with the Ohio boy. He said he'd been shot down the second day of the war. His squadron had been circling, looking for Jap planes which the listening devices had picked up out at sea, heading in from the direction of Formosa. They'd been up all morning, were almost out of gas, so decided to land and refuel. The first plane came in all right, but the second overshot the field. His plane was the third, and he said as he put his wheels on the ground a load of bombs crashed down out of the clouds onto the other end of the field. Of course he poured the soup into her and took off. He tried to gain altitude and headed for Nichols Field, when suddenly a flight of Jap fighters popped out of the clouds. He turned and headed right for the center of it, but when he pressed the button only one of his six guns would work—the rest were jammed. He said don't ask him why—ask the guys who designed them or installed them or serviced them. His job was just to press the button, and he'd done that. There he was with two Zeros on his tail, filling him full of holes—they were explosive bullets, too; he had gashes all over where he'd been nicked. He said he dived into a near-by cloud and managed to shake them, but then his motor began to sputter—had been almost out of gas when the attack started, and the Jap bullets in his tanks had spilled the rest. So he headed her nose down out of the cloud, and as luck would have it spotted an emergency field. But his wing tip hit a tree and the plane cracked up, mashing in all the bones on the right side of his face. He'd spent a week in a native hospital on a bamboo bunk without the bones set, and now he could only mumble to me out of the left corner of his mouth.

"Our coastal batteries were having to fall back."

"The next day Tex on the other side told me his story. He was also a fighter pilot and his squadron had been at Clark Field—flying all morning. They'd come down to gas the planes, and the pilots were sitting around on the wings or in their cockpits, waiting for orders to take off, when suddenly there was a big bang and the plane he was sitting in seemed to jump about forty feet in the air, and then pancaked back with its wings folded over the cockpit. The Japs had popped out of a cloud and let them have it. He crawled out unscratched, but he said for half an hour everything was in the wildest confusion—the Japs circling above, blowing those grounded planes around like popcorn in a hot skillet.

"The dope on the listening devices seemed to be, he said, that they had picked up the Japs a hundred miles at sea, followed them in all right, but then lost when they were fifteen miles off the coast.

"But somebody decided the Japs must be heading for Baguio, and they were sitting there, all gassed up, waiting word to take off and intercept the Japs before they got to Baguio. Whereas, as a matter of fact, the Japs were perched in a cloud right over their own field, waiting to let them have it.

"He said after the bombing they'd managed to piece together out of the wreckage about ten per cent of the planes they'd originally had. A week later he'd cracked up landing on a soft spot on the field—a bomb crater that hadn't been properly filled—and here he was.

"The next time the skipper here dropped in on me, he said that was the dope he was getting—that we had only six P-40's left. Soon it got down to two; we called 'em the Phantom and the Lone Ranger.

"And I said, 'My God, what's going to happen to us?' "

"I told him I didn't know," said Bulkeley, "but that I'd been talking to the Admiral, who'd said that we couldn't possibly hope to hold the Philippine Islands, that Singapore and Hong Kong would fall too, unless help arrived—and soon. And probably the Dutch East Indies."

"Well, that floored me," said Kelly. "So I asked him how they were going to use the MTB's—wouldn't they let us go out on any offensive missions? He said he'd been trying to get the Admiral to let him go to Lingayen Gulf on a raid. Eighty Jap transports were up there landing troops, and our coastal batteries were having to fall back because of Jap air superiority—Jap fighters diving on the batteries and machine-gunning them until no one could take it.

"Then I asked the skipper how the infantry was holding. 'Not worth a damn,' he said. The straffing is just cutting them to ribbons. Not only that, but the Japs are landing tanks—a hell of a lot of automatic weapons which are just what we need and haven't got.' By the time he left, I was as low as he was.

"That night Peggy, who was on night duty, got a few minutes off about one o'clock to come in and shoot the breeze with me. She'd been picking up a lot of stuff, and she said a hunch of our tank-corps boys had just been brought in. She told me what they'd been telling her, and finally said she guessed it wouldn't hurt if I went in and lay down for half an hour on an empty bunk next to them, so I could hear it myself.

"They'd walked two hundred kilometers barefoot. Four tankloads of them had been sent in to head off a Jap landing near Batangas—they were to go ahead of four columns of infantry and pave the way for retaking a little fishing village held by a small Jap force.

"The boys said their major had assured them the Japs had nothing higher than 50-caliber machine guns—of course their armor would stop that. So they started on in, when all of a sudden—Bam! The Japs had waited until they got within good range, and then opened up with an anti-tank gun which knocked the doors off the lead tank, and then, because the road was too narrow for the rest to turn around on, they knocked the treads off all the others except one.

" 'Well, then what did you do?' I asked the kids.

" 'Fired about two hundred rounds of 50-caliber and four rounds of 37-millimeter cannon.'

" 'Which way were you shooting?'

" 'Every which way. You see, it all happened so fast we couldn't tell where the Jap fire was coming from. At the end of five minutes, three of those tanks ended up in the rice paddy—they were fourteen-ton light tanks—two of them with the doors blown off, and in one of these, the Jap machine-gun fire had cut the legs off the lieutenant in command. The others were riddled with holes. Our tank was the only one that wasn't hurt.'

" 'So what did you do?'

" 'Tried to turn it around and get the hell out of there. But the road was too narrow, and then the tank got stuck in reverse, and ended up on its side in the rice paddy.'

" 'What did the infantry do?'

" 'Ran like rabbits.'

" 'Didn't they have any guns?'

" 'Only rifles—not a machine gun in the crowd. Maybe they didn't have anything else to give them, but anyway the major said all they would find up there was rifles, and if there were any Jap machine guns, the tanks would deal with that. So there they were, being cut to ribbons by concealed machine-gun fire, and nothing else to do but get for cover.'

" 'Didn't all this—sending those tanks into a trap without scouting ahead—seem like a damn-fool maneuver to you?' I asked him.

" 'Well,' the kid said, 'the major and the lieutenant had worked out the same maneuver at armored school back in the States. It had worked there; they thought it was pretty good.'

"So I asked the kid why he thought it hadn't worked this time.

" 'Maybe because the Japs were too clever in hiding their anti-tank guns and too good shots. They knocked the treads and doors off most of the tanks before they had time to do anything. And then, unlike the roads back in the States, these were narrow native roads, with rice paddies on both sides—you couldn't maneuver.'

HOW MUCH FOOD SHOULD YOU EAT?

You may think that food requirements were measured in vitamins but before the discovery of vitamins the amount and kinds of food that should be eaten daily were measured in calories. A calorie is a measured amount of heat, that is, the amount of heat required to raise one kilogram of water (a little over two pounds) one degree centigrade (which is about 2½ degrees Fahrenheit). Thus the average diet was made up of one part protein—meat, eggs, fish, two parts fats—butter, cream, fat meats and four parts starches—bread, potatoes, fruits and vegetables. In calories this would mean about 400 of proteins, 800 of fats and 1,600 of vegetables and fruits daily for average man doing some work daily. This method of calorie measurement is still in use.

Dr. Barton

In an article on nutrition in the Journal of the American Medical Association, Drs. Eugene F. DuBois and William H. Chambers, New York city, state:

The amount of heat given off by the resting man of average size (at complete rest and no digestion going on) is about equal to the heat of a 60-watt electric bulb or the flame of an alcohol lamp about one inch high. A man exercising hard equals the heat of 10 such lamps. As most of us are not at complete rest all of the time, nor are we working hard all the time. the amount of food needed will depend upon how much we rest and how hard we work. Thus one table of the numher of calories needed by various trades is:

Men: Tailor, 2,600; hookhinder, 3,000; shoemaker, 3,100; cabinetmaker, 3,500 to 3,600; stone mason, 4,700 to 5,200; wood sawyer, 5,500 to 6,000. There are other trades such as moulders or foundrymen, stokers, molten metal workers and others where 6,000 calories are needed daily.

Women: Stenographer or office worker, 2,000 calories; seamstress with hand needle, 2,000; seamstress with machine, 2,100 to 2,300; bookhinder, 2,100 to 2,300; household worker, 2,500 to 3,200; washer-women, 2,900 to 3,700.

Facts About Acne, Pimples

Although the various methods of treatment help many cases of acne (pimples), the actual cause of acne is not fully known. Because it occurs at or near the age of puberty, most physicians believe that acne is in some way connected with the changes in the glands which causes boys and girls to emerge into men and women.

In the Journal of Clinical Endocrinology, Dr. Hamilton, Yale medical school, reports results in cases where he was able to bring on scne in certain individuals. He found that giving the hormone or extract of the male sex gland to boys who had not reached puberty, some of them developed blackheads, pimples, with and without pus formation. When the treatment with the sex hormone was stopped, the pimples became smaller and disappeared. When given again, the pimples returned.

This does not mean that this gland extract is the only factor entering into the cause of acne as diet, heredity, and infection may also be factors. However, despite other factors, the pimples appeared only when the sex hormone was given.

"There seems to be something in this male hormone substance that stimulates the sebaceous or oil glands of the skin."

For this reason, Dr. Hamilton suggests that as there is some relation between the thyroid gland—the master gland of the body—and the sex glands, there is logical reason for the use of desiccated thyroid gland extract in cases of acne at the time of puberty. The thyroid extract checks any excess of oil pouring out from the oil glands on the skin and stimulates the skin cells to a more normal activity. The thyroid extract stimulates all the body processes and therefore the skin. Excellent results have been obtained by using visoterol by mouth and also by the use of injections of pituitary extract. As with all extracts, this should be done under supervision of a physician.

PETER AND JOHN LEADERS IN THE EARLY CHURCH

LESSON TEXT—Acts 2:37-41; 3:1-8; 4:13; 18-21.

GOLDEN TEXT—Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.—Acts 4:13.

Does the Church have a messsge for our day? Sometimes one wonders a bit, hut a little thought indicates that if it does not, it is not because Christianity has failed, but because Christian people have failed to declare the eternal and powerful truth of God. The primary responsibility for any such failure must rest upon the leaders of the Church.

It is instructive to see the qualities which made the leaders of the early Church effective for the Lord. In our lesson we find Peter and John doing three things.

I. Declaring God's Word (Acts 2: 37-41).

Peter had just finished the first sermon preached in the Church, which was delivered at Pentecost. The declaration of God's truth in the power of the Holy Spirit brought conviction of sin. It always does, although the outward indication of its working may not he as marked as it was on that day. Three thousand souls were under conviction and asking what to do to he saved.

What an opportunity for the preacher and his fellow worker, John. How did they meet it? By faithfully declaring the need of repentance and faith, and then of fellowship with others in the Church.

One mark of a real leader for God will always he that he preaches and teaches the message of God without adulteration, without modification, and with plainness and simplicity.

The kind of leadership which is often magnified in the Church today and which is largely made up of personal magnetism, "pep" and fast talk, is not real leadership at all. Test your leaders by their faithful and intelligent declaration of God's Word.

II. Conveying God's Power (Acts 3:1-8).

"Channels only"—that is the function of the worker for Christ, the leader in His Church. As Mary Maxwell well put it:

Channels only, blessed Master,
But with all Thy wondrous power
Flowing through us, You canst use us
Every day and every hour.

Silver and gold was a scarce commodity with Peter and John, as it has been with many, yes most, of God's servants through the centuries. But they did have the blessed privilege of being channels through which the healing, cleansing, redeeming power of God could flow—and that was infinitely better.

The lame man had long since given up hope of anything hetter than the few coins he could heg at the temple gate. He was like many in our hard and practical age who see only the values that money can give, and thus miss the real hlessing of God.

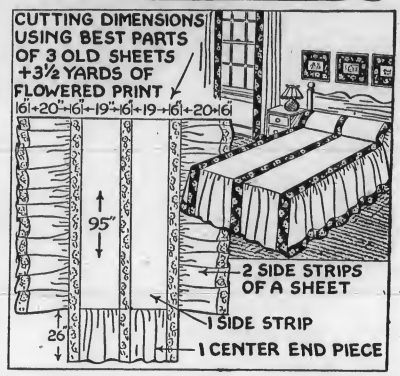
God has for men today, as He had for this heggar, that which is far better than gold—deliverance from sin and liberation from the limitations of spirit which make them content with the paltry alms of men.

Peter and John were ready to be used of God because they were men who were not too busy to pray (v. 1). Knowing the compassion of God they sought out the one in need, and by faith put the unlimited power of God to work on his behalf.

God healed this man's body, but what is important, He healed his spirit (v. 8). We need that kind of healing for the weak-kneed, lame-ankled, spirit-darkened individuals in our communities and our churches. We will have it only as our leaders are men and women who are cleansed—ready to be channels for the conveying of God's power to a needy world.

III. Doing God's Will (Acts 4:13, 18-21).

The way of life of God's leaders is not an easy one, but it is a simple one. They do God's will—nothing less, nothing more, and nothing else. What could be more delightful?



Peter and John had spoken the truth and declared salvation to be only in the name of Jesus (v. 12). Certain easy talkers within the Church who tell us that we must not be narrow but broad enough to see salvation in all religions, had better read that verse again.

Because they had preached Christ, and for no other reason, they were imprisoned, then released on condition that they would not mention Him again. What a splendid opportunity for a smooth and comfortable compromise! They could preach but just leave out Christ. Did they do it? No! (vv. 19, 20).

Obedience to God was paramount with them, and it must be with every genuinely Christian leader in the Church. Nothing else will do, nor will it have the blessing and approval of God.

ANY pretty flowered print may be combined with the side strips of sheets that are good after the center part has worn out. A good section may be cut from the center bottom too. The diagram at the left gives all the dimensions you need for making a spread for a double bed from the good parts of three old sheets put together with six-inch strips flowered cotton material of about the same weight.

Here, the figured goods is in a pink and white pattern that is especially effective with the white muslin. It is also used to trim the curtains made from old sheets. Another interesting color note is the mats of the pink and white material used for the row of framed photographs over the bed. It also edges the full white lamp shades.

HOW CHATTERER HAD FOOLED PETER RABBIT

CHATTERER the Red Squirrel is a scamp himself, and not to be trusted. Nobody in the Green Forest or on the Green Meadow trusts him. And people who cannot be trusted themselves never trust anyone else. Chatterer never does. He is always suspicious. So when Peter Rabbit had said good-by and started for the dear Old Briar Patch without knowing where Chatterer's new house was Chatterer had made up his mind right away that Peter would never be satisfied until he knew, or thought he knew, where that new house was.

He watched Peter out of sight, then he slipped down out of sight between the stones of the old wall. "I know what Peter will do," said he to himself. "Peter will come sneaking back and hide where he can watch me and so find out where my new house is. I'll just stay here long enough to give him a chance to hide and then I'll fool him."

You see, Chatterer knew that if he had been in Peter's place he would have done just that thing. So he waited a little while and then went back to the place where Peter had left him. There he sat and pretended to be looking in the direction in which Peter had gone as if to make sure that Peter was really on his way home. But all the time Chatterer was watching out of the corners of his eyes to see if Peter was hiding anywhere near. He didn't see Peter, but he didn't have the least doubt that Peter was somewhere about.

And so it was that he saw Peter crawl out from under the little bush where he had been hiding.

After a while he ran over to a hole between the stones of the old wall and pretended to be very busy there just as if it really were the new house he had found. He kept popping in and out and looking around as if afraid that someone was watching him. He even got some dry leaves and took them inside as if to make a bed. All the time, although he hadn't seen a sign of Peter, he didn't have the least doubt in the world that Peter was watching him. When he grew tired a new idea popped into his shrewd little head. He popped out of the hole and sat up on the wall. Then he said aloud that verse which had made Peter's ears burn so. He had meant to make Peter's ears burn. He said that verse just as if he really did believe that Peter was not spying on him and was glad of it.

When he had finished, he whisked out of sight again to give Peter a chance to get away. But this time Chatterer did some peeking himself. He hid where Peter couldn't see him, but where he himself could see both ways along the old stone wall, and so it was that he saw Peter crawl out from under the little bush where he had been hiding and sneak away in the direction of the dear Old Briar Patch. And he knew that this time Peter really had gone for good.

Then Chatterer laughed and laughed to think how he had fooled Peter Rabbit, and wished that he could pat himself on the back for being so smart. He didn't once think of how dishonest and mean it was of Peter to spy on him because, you see, he would have done the same thing himself, and he was judging Peter by himself. "One has to have one's wits very sharp these days to keep a secret," chuckled Chatterer.

But over in the Old Briar Patch that afternoon Peter Rabbit sat very thoughtful and very much ashamed. The thought that he had found out where Chatterer's new house was didn't give him the pleasure that he had thought it would. His ears still burned, for he thought that Chatterer thought he was honest when he wasn't.

"I believe I'll go over tomorrow and tell Chatterer all about it and how mean I have been," said he at last. And when he had made up his mind to do this he felt better.

Miss Lizzie Vest has as her house guests, Misses Sallie Vest and a friend from Washington D. C.

News comes to us of the sudden passing of Mrs. Della Roberts Moore at her home in St. Petersburg, Florida.

Mrs. Moore was born and reared at Verona and was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Boone Roberts.

She was married in 1917 to Jack Moore of Cleveland, Ohio and with him went immediately to Florida where they established their home. About a year ago Mr. Moore preceded her to the Great Beyond and she seemed never to recover from her great loss. Though alone she insisted on remaining in the home where the happy years of companionship had been spent with her husband. Her faithful and devoted neighbors did all they could to relieve her sadness and lonliness, it was one of these loving neighbors who coming in after an interval of about two hours found the lifeless body of her friend sitting easily in her chair. Fortunately a neice, Mrs. George Baker was in St. Petersburg at the time and she was able to direct the arrangements.

Funeral services were held in the John S. Rhodes Chapel and burial was beside her husband in Royal Palm Cemetery. Rev. J. A. McClure had charge of the services. Mrs. Moore was a sister of Mrs. Howe Cleek.

SWEETPOTATO PLANT BEDS
By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

Sweetpotatoes are a "war crop" this year, which means that a large part of the commercial crop will go to the Armed Forces, and in a dehydrated form, to the Allies, overseas. Valuable food as they are, and easy to grow, there should be some in every garden. A 100-ft. row should make 1½ bushels of fine potatoes, from 75 plants. Now is the time to start the plant bed.

The size of the bed depends on the number of plants desired. A bed 3 by 6 feet accomodates a bushel of seed, and should produce 1,500 plants for early May setting but if drawing is continued until June 15, the latest practicable setting date, from 3,000 to 4,000.

The best way is to make a hot bed with a pit 15 inches deep, for 12 inches of properly prepared horse manure, and a cover of earth, 3 inches. A 12-inch plank frame should enclose the bed. Another, though slower way, is a cold frame, with 12-inch sides. In either case, the potatoes are laid so as not to touch each other. Then they are covered with 4 inches of new sawdust, or light soil taken from where sweetpotatoes have not been grown for at least two years, to avoid any chance of carry-over disease.

Disease may also be carried on the seed sweets, and these should be treated, even though they appear healthy. Mercury having gone to way, corrosive sublimate is difficult to find, but in its stead, borax may be used, easy to get inexpensive and quite effective. The borax is dissolved in water, 6 pounds to 30 gallons, the potatoes soaked 10 minutes. This solution will treat 50 bushels of seed, and half this, up to 25, but no less amount than 15 gallons should be made, using 3 pounds of borax. The potatoes may be bedded wet, with no rinsing. With the solution that remains, the frame and the sash should be thoroughly swabbed, or the canvas covering soaked, the idea being to make everything about the bed surgically clean so that no germs of black rot and soil stain may remain alive. Any solution that still remains should be poured away where no living thing may get to it.

CONTROL CAN DO WHAT PROHIBITION CAN'T!

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS....

"Judge, I didn't realize till the other night when I ran across an article in the paper what a whale of a lot of industrial alcohol the government needs for the war."

"I should say it does, Chet. I understand the beverage distillers around the country are producing about 240,000,000 gallons of industrial alcohol this year for ammunition. tires, and other things. I'd say it's mighty fortunate these distilleries are available to do the job. Otherwise, if we still had prohibition, the government would have had to spend millions of dollars and use up a lot of critical materials to build plants...to say nothing of all the time it would take. It might have been just another case of 'too little, too late'."

Final Report Made On 2nd War Loan Drive

The final week of the Second War Loan Drive ending May 8th shows 79 people subscribed for $6887.50, making a total of 1442 subscribers for a total of $560,866.90 in the April Drive. To this amount $216,000.00 subscribed by the banks must be added to make a grand total of $776,866.90 as Boone Count's financial investment in the War effort for the April Drive. The people of this county responded wonderfully and much beyond expectations when the drive started. Several Precinct Chairmen say they are taking orders for the next drive which will probably come this fall. This shows what the American people can do when once aroused and become war minded, and the Citizens of Boone County will be right in there pitching again this fall if necessary.

Correction—Tobbaco Plant Bed Treatment.

The Bluestone-lime treatment for tobacco plant beds was given in the issue of this paper two weeks ago by the county agent's office. Fifty gallons of the 3-4-50 Bluestone-lime treatment was given as the amount required for 200 square yards of bed. In the same sentence it added a bed 66 feet long by 9 feet wide equalling the 200 square yards.

This statement should have read 66 yards long by 3 yards (9 feet) wide, 66 yards would equal 198 long by 9 feet wide.

No injury would occur if 50 gallons was applied to the 66 feet of bed instead of the 198 feet. A waste of material and expense would occur, however.

Farmers desiring additional information should secure the College of Agriculture leaflet "Recommendations for the Control of Wild Fire and Angular Leafspot of Barley Tobacco."

Pond Building Equipment Available

Pond building equipment is now available to Boone County farmers according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Farmers desiring to have ponds or lakes constructed for improved livestock water supply should contact the particular contractor they desire to employ at the earliest possible date. Heavy equipment used in this work is difficult to move. The contractors desire to follow a definite route with a mimimun of back tracking.

Al Wolsing of the John G. Exterkamp Company, Covington already has one bull dozer in the county and plans to bring a second outfit in the county this next week. His rate is $6.00 per hour.

Improved water supply is one of the essentials for more profitable livestock production. Good ponds or lakes are one of the cheapest and best sources of water. Farmers who use care in the selection of pond sites will save considerable on cost of overflow or spillway construction and will give greater insurance of a successful pond. Every farmer consructing a pond should insist, demand and see that a good clay core of sufficient depth is constructed in the dam to prevent leakage.

J. C. Acree, of the Boone County Soil Conservation Service, phone Burlington 94 will assist farmers in locating dam sites and in contacting contractors who are interested in doing custom work for farmers in the county. College of Agriculture, Extension circular No. 317 on Ear the Dam construction is available at the county agent's office.

Worms are Found in Tobacco Beds

Tobacco beds are being injured in several localities in the state by a large white grub that tunnels in the soil and disturbs the roots of the young plants. The grub is the larva of the green June beitle. When many grubs are present, the entire bed of plants may be destroyed. The most successful control measure, according to the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station entomologists, is a poisoned bait which is broadcast on the bed late in the evening.

The bait is made by mixing, when dry, a pound of Paris green with either 25 pounds of wheat bran or corn meal and then adding just enough water so the bait crumbles when picked up in the hand. The bait is used at the rate of 10 to 12 pounds to 100 square yards of plant bed. The bed should be sprinkled with water, if the surface is dry, a short time before the bait is broadcast.

LETTER FROM TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The following letter was received from the Treasury Department:

Gentlemen:

I am writing to tell you about what I beleive is a magnificent tribute to the patriotism of the American people.

As you know, there has been considerable speculation and talk concerning the effect that increased taxes might have on the sale and redemption of United States Savings Bonds.

You will be delighted to know that during March, when the first Tax installment fell due, bond sales were 6.4% higher than in February, and more than 65% ahead of March, 1942.

The story on redemptions is equally encouraging.

From May 1, 1941, when U. S. Savings Bonds (Series E, F and G) were first offered for sale, through March 31, 1943, redemptions have been less than 3½% of total sales. And redemptions during March this year were only eighty-seven one-hundredths of one percent of the total amount outstanding. That's a record that all Americans can well be proud of..

What is shows is that we as a Nation fully realize the privilege that is ours to do our part in helping to finance the tremendous costs of total war. It shows that as a people we understand the necessity not only for buying War Bonds but also for keeping them.

Many thanks for all you have done, and for your continuing efforts to make the War Savings Program sucessful.

Sincerely,
Eugene W. Sloan
Executive Director
War Savings Staff

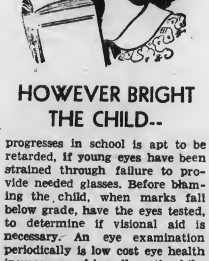
4-H Boys Active In Soil Conservation.

Three teams of 4-H Club boys in Boone County have been supplied with material to be used in preparing themselves in various modern methods of soil conservation according to O. D. Perkinson, Assistant County Agent.

When the project is completed the boys should have a working knowledge of terracing and contiur cultivation. There may be no expect developed, but the boys, as well as their fathers will become conscious of the terrible loss to farm land coming from erosion and top soil being carried away by two much run-off. The value of cover crops and proper seeding of farm land will be stressed in this project. Every farm presents an entirely different problem in soil conservation. For this reason the three teams taking part are expected to have rather lively time this summer.

Expression Of Appreciation



In behalf of the Boone County Homemakers Association, appreciation is expressed for the wholehearted support and financial contributions made with reference to the Service Roll which was recently dedicated. Boone County citizens sent checks and cash to members of the committee and dropped their contributions in boxes which had been set in various stores in the community. No effort is being made to list those persons who contributed because the names of many are not known. But records have been kept of sizable contributions that came in through the mail, these would be made available to anyone who wishes to see them.

The committee is glad to announce that the board is paid for and that a small fund remains which will be used for the maintenance of it.

The personal interest shown by Hess Vest of Walton, and Noel Walton of Burlington, did much to cut the expense of the erection of the board. Appreciation is expressed to these gentlemen.

It is the earnest desire of the committee that the board shall be kept up to date, and that the name of no Boone Couny man or woman serving in the Armed Forces shall be omitted from the list. It is urged that names not found on the board be turned in to members of the committee.

Signed,
Mrs. Sam Sleet
Mrs. R. C. Garrison
Mrs. Geo. Kottmyer
Mrs. Albert Wills
Mrs. John Boyer

Important Notice To Car Owners

If the bulk of the motorist in Walton who operate their vehicles with B and C gasoline rations want to assure themselves of a supply of gasoline on June 1, they will begin at once to go to their local War Price and Rationing Boards or plant transportation committees for renewal application blanks.

The "stitch in-time-saves-nine" suggestion will have a valid ring to the hundreds of motorists who last February delayed making application for renewed supplemental milage until the very end of the month and who were stranded for several days in gasthirsty cars.

R. E. Brugh, chairman of the local WPR board, today reminded drivers of the regulation which permits application for renewed rations a month before the expiration of the old and said the bulk of supplemental rations would expire May 31.

"As our harassed board members well remember, they were overwhelmingly swamped by a last-minute flood of applications which they just could not get to by the end of the month," R. E. Brugh said. "It is for their sake and for the interest of the drivers that we are appealing for early applications."

Applicants need not take their application blanks to the board but mail them accompanied by their tire inspection records. Several days before the expiration of the old books, the board will mail the new rations and the record back to the applicant.

District mileage rationing representatives of the Office of Price Administration have begun to contact plant transportation committees urging their cooperation in keeping applications flowing evenly to the boards through the month of May. Where committees file applications for their employes, War Price and Rationing Boards will process and send the gas ration books immediately to the plants for distribution by the plant committees a few days before the valid period begins.

Boards are also enlisting volunteer workers early for the ration renewal period and are being supplied with all the forms needed for a successful, smooth appliation period.

Notice—

Dr. H. F. Mann has resumed practice here at his Walton Office next door to Dr. D. L. Maddox. Office hours: 2 to 4 and 7 to 8 p. m., Sundays by appointment only.

Davis Appeals for Larger Plantings

An appeal of Chester Davis, War Food Administrator, for larger crop plantings, sent to Dean Thomas P. Cooper of the University of Kentucky Experiment Station, has been passed along to all Kentucky county agents.

"This is the most important planting season in American farm history," said Mr. Davis. "We can still increase the number of acres we plant. In a very few days it will be too late. The War Food Administration is asking farmers to plant to the limit for critical war crops, food crops and feed for livestock in the drive that has been made to increase the acreage of beans, potatoes and oil minimize the importance of other crops. There was no intention to essential crops. Expanded production also of feed, grain and hay is vitally necessary, if we are to continue our record heavy production of livestock and livestock products.

"The War Food Administration is organizing the country's latent labor resources to help with the harvests this year. Acting with manufacturers and with other government agencies, we will do our best to see that more harvesting machinery is ready by the time it is needed. We will work for continuing price supports at fair levels in order to minimize risks in the market place. We ask farmers on their part in the days that remain of spring planting to take an extra degree of chance this year for their country—to plant in full the acreage they can expect to handle under the most favorable circumstances."

Testifying before the Truman defense investigating committee, Undersecretary of War Robert Patterson, right, revealed that a truce had been arranged in his feud with Rubber Administrator William Jeffers. Long at odds over a battle for priorities for equipment for aviation gasoline and synthetic rubber plants, Patterson and Jeffers were brought together by Ferdinand Eberstadt, former WPB official, in a Washington hotel room. They agreed to make a personal inspection of the gasoline and rubber plants, working out arrangements for breaking bottlenecks in either program.

PAY AS YOU GO:
75% Forgiven

As the shadows lengthened on Capitol Hill, 313 congressmen ended a hectic day of debate by passing the Robertson-Forand pay-as-you-go measure, forgiving 75 per cent of the 1942 income taxes and putting all taxpayers on a current basis.

After rejecting the Ruml plan as embodied in the Carlson bill, which would have forgiven all taxes, and voting to recommit the house ways and means committee measure, which would have applied 1941 rates to 1942 incomes, the congressmen acted on the Robertson-Forand proposal.

Under the Robertson-Forand bill, which went to the senate following house action, all taxpayers would be exempted from paying the 6 per cent normal and first surtax of 13 per cent on their 1942 incomes. Those with taxable income over the 13 per cent surtax, however, would have to pay balance of the 1942 tax. In that case, their first two payments this year would be applied against their remaining liability, and if they still had a balance outstanding, they could clean it up in two later payments.

As to 1943 taxes, the Robertson-Forand bill provides for a 20 per cent withholding tax against wages and salaries after exemptions have been estimated. Of this amount, 3 per cent would be taken out for the Victory tax, the tax being reduced from 5 per cent.

TUNISIA:
Yanks Are Coming

Yielding to strong pressure from the Second American army of Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, Axis troops fell back to their last stronghold in northern Tunisia, there to await the final assault of the Allied forces. Even as they were being regrouped for the decisive battle, American units pressed forward against their fortified positions in the mountains.

The Axis took up their new positions along the last perimeter of defenses ringing the great naval base of Bizerte, after Yankee infantry had cleaned them out of the strategic hill country to the west.

Advancing under the cover of heavy artillery, American troops braved scathing machine gun and mortar fire to crawl up the scraggly slopes and ferret the enemy from their entrenchments. Then they swept into Mateur, strategic rail and road junction 18 miles south of Bizerte.

In the central sector, the Axis maintained their massed armored columns to stand off the British First army along the level approaches to the gateway of Tunis.

Meeting Place

Having finally agreed to get together, Generals Charles De Gaulle and Henri Giraud, the anti-Axis French leaders, were at odds as to where to meet. Fearing public demonstrations of De Gaullist sympathy in North African cities where the Fighting French chieftain is strongest, Giraud had been angling to hold the meeting in some secluded location.

SUPREME COURT:
No Tax on Evangelism

Reversing its stand of one year ago, the United States Supreme court ruled as invalid all forms of licensing the spreading of the written and spoken word.

Particularly, the court attacked the collection of license fees by four cities from Jehovah's Witnesses for distribution of its religious tracts. Such fees, it said, were a violation of the first constitutional amendment guaranteeing speech freedom.

RUSSIA:
Nazis Repulsed

Nazi attacks against Russian lines around Novorosissk were repulsed with losses, the Reds claimed, and all of the enemy's efforts to enlarge its bridgehead in the vicinity were checked.

While ground fighting flared, Russian airmen were active over the Caucasian front, shooting down 54 Nazi planes in swirling dogfights west of Krasnodar.

Minor artillery duels were reported all along the rest of the huge battle-line. The Nazis announced Allied planes again raided East Prussia, one being shot down.

NAVAL BATTLE:
Convoy Scattered

Happening upon a Jap convoy northwest of the Aleutian islands, a daring American naval task force closed in for an attack even as strong Japanese units bore down off its flank.

After breaking up the convoy which included three transports headed for Attu and Kiska, the American force, led by Rear Adm. C. H. McMorris, then wheeled toward home, and with three destroyers running interference, maneuvered clear of the enemy fleet.

Racing in close to hold off the Jap fleet with torpedo fire, the destroyers threw up smoke screens to cover their withdrawal after the attacks. Checked by the fire, the enemy stood by while the Americans slipped through.

Despite the intense barrage of the heavy Jap cruisers and destroyers which fell within the proximity of the American ships, the U. S. units emerged with no material losses.

FOOD CONFERENCE:
43 Nations to Meet

Representatives from 43 nations will meet at Hot Springs, Va., next week for the Allied food conference.

The conference will revolve around American proposals for achieving more efficient production and wider distribution of the world's food.

Plans also will be discussed for restoration of agricultural production in Europe after occupation by Allied forces.

The conference will be wholly exploratory, it was said, with the different representatives laying the conference recommendations before their respective governments for individual adoption.

SUBS:
Japs Efficient

According to Allied spokesmen, Japanese submarine activity in the South Pacific has equaled that of the Germans in the Atlantic.

In both cases, Allied naval leaders said enemy U-boats have sunk about 3 per cent of total shipping.

Using 2 per cent as a basis, the Allies have lost 210,000 tons during the five months of the Tunisian campaign. No actual figures were given for the Pacific theater.

The Japs put out a claim recently that they had sunk a 12,000-ton tanker, a 12,000-ton troopship and an 8,000-ton freighter.

INVASION:
Nazis to Hit England?

According to reports received in Madrid from authoritative diplomatic and military sources, Adolf Hitler may try to invade England and end the war after stabilizing the Russian front.

Allied circles accepted the reports with a goodly grain of salt, however. There was a feeling that the rumors may have been planted to confuse Allied preparations for a second front in Europe.

COAL TRUCE:
Time to Dicker

Following the establishment of a 15-day truce in the bitter coal strike, Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes ordered the nation's 3,850 mines to shift to a six-day week or suffer cancellation of price increases recently granted them to cover the expense of such operations.

Under the miners' present contract, they are paid time-and-half for all work over 35 hours on the sixth day. The additional pay they receive under Ickes' order was said not to need the approval of the War Labor board.

Reached by the government with the United Mine Workers' chieftain, John L. Lewis, the truce assures continued coal production and opportunity for additional negotiation with the operators.

From the first, Lewis gave no indication of backing down on his demands for a $2 a day wage increase; for time spent in the mines traveling to and from the coal faces, and unionization of minor bosses.

At the same time, Lewis continued to hammer at the War Labor board's formula for limiting wage increases to 15 per cent over 1941 levels.

MYSTERY:
House on R Street

Everybody in Washington is talking about the house on R street. A big, red, Georgian mansion, almost as spacious as a hotel, it is the residence of one John Monroe, also known as Monroe Kaplan, business man and manufacturers' representative.

"Sometimes the food's terrible," Monroe said in talking about the now famous parties held in the house, "but my guests don't come for food, but for interesting conversation."

Topping the list of Monroe's guests were Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox; Maj. Gen. Levin H. Campbell, chief of army ordnance; Senator Warren R. Austin of Vermont; and Representative James H. Morrison of Louisiana. Senator Styles Bridges of New Hampshire was honored at the house with a party celebrating his recovery from an illness.

Rubber Administrator William Jeffers said he had received many invitations to break bread at the hospitable house, but refused them all. Jeffers said that Monroe was trying to promote an important man in the United States senate for President.

CHINA:
Fight for Rail Line

Continuing in their reported campaign to obtain full grasp of the railroad system of China to build up a communication line from the Asiatic mainland to Japan, select Nipponese troops continued hammering at strategic Chinese positions.

While the Japs claimed to have encircled 20,000 Chinese troops along the Peiping-Hankow railroad, the Chinese asserted that their troops repulsed persistent Jap attacks.

Japanese efforts to drop picked troops behind Chinese lines by parachute failed, the Chinese said, when their forces wiped out these units in hard fighting. All along the Taiheng mountains where the battle raged, the Chinese held their ground in hand-to-hand warfare.

In Washington, D. C., the army announced that Gen. Edgar E. Glenn of the 14th air force in China was wounded by bomb fragmentation when Japanese bombers struck at an American base.

TRAGEDY:
In Iceland

Tragedy on the bleak island of Iceland claimed the life of the eighth American general to be killed or missing in this war when Lieut. Gen. Frank M. Andrews, commander of all American forces in the European theater, crashed to his death. With the general and sharing his fate was Methodist Bishop Adna Wright Leonard, on an inspection tour of religious facilities in U. S. military bases on behalf of 31 American Protestant denominations.

A former cavalry officer who transferred to the air force during the last World war, General Andrews was foremost among the early advocates for a strong American air arm. He was partly credited with the development of the famous Flying Fortress.

MISCELLANY:

STORMY: Stormy weather accounted for some of the Allied losses in the recent big Japanese bombing raid on Port Darwin, Australia. Strong winds developed during the dog fights and forced some of the fliers into the ocean.

VISITOR: Coming as a visitor, with no hand out, Eduard Benes, chief of the exiled Czechoslovak government, will visit the U. S. in May, confer with President Roosevelt and make three speeches in Chicago.

PROFITS: Profits of British shipbuilders constructing warships reached 80 per cent in one instance, with the average aggregating between 20 and 30 per cent.

ESCAPE: The entire crew of 42 of a medium-sized U. S. merchant vessel recently survived torpedoing in the North Atlantic. They took to lifeboats in a calm sea.

MORE ROOM: Three types of caskets have been lengthened three inches on order of WPB which took the action after a storm of criticism greeted an earlier directive to limit coffins to six feet.

AIR PRISONERS IN GERMANY

The fate of American fliers in the Doolittle raid has raised the question: What happens to airmen who go down over Europe? Here is the answer from an officer of the U. S. bomber command in England.

If fliers bail out and get down safely over France, Belgium or occupied Europe, their chances of getting back to England are pretty good. They become prisoners of war, but in the course of exchanging prisoners, they may soon get back to base.

If they bail out over Germany, there's not much chance of getting back. But so far as we know, the treatment of air prisoners is similar to that of other prisoners, and varies according to rank.

There is one incident, however, that damns the German record—the story of Paddy Finucane. Most people suppose that the famous RAF ace lost his life because his Spitfire crashed into the channel after being hit over France.

The truth is—though this has never been published—that as Finucane was falling, he was strafed by German machine gunfire, and he was already dead when he hit the water.

Thus a new meaning comes to Finucane's famous phrase, "This is it, chaps."

TOUGH JOB

When you sift down all the hullabaloo about Elmer Davis and his Office of War Information, the only valid criticism you can make against the drawling Hoosier is that he is working too hard. The last two weeks when he went on the air, he was so exhausted he had a stand-by alongside ready to take up his script if he collapsed.

Davis works far into the night, tries to read all that his voluminous office produces, sees almost everyone who wants to see him.

But given a tough situation, basically he has done a good job. Senators like Montana's Wheeler and Nevada's McCarran, whose acid digestive systems are always poisoning their political outlook, make a wry face at Davis. But Wheeler and McCarran are always demanding more facts and inside fact is that Davis has been fighting their battle in keeping the American public informed.

Most of Davis' fight is getting news, squeezing it out of government bureaus which don't want to give, making the army and navy release facts which show up their mistakes, rowing with Czarubber Jeffers because his estimates on tires are too rosy.

When Davis stepped down from his well-paying radio job to correlate government information, everyone envied him his job, thought he had a softie. But the job of digging news, accurate news, unpleasant news out of the government is not soft. And it is not popular.

Davis is a good newsman. Being such, he is not popular, never will be in some quarters.

Note: Davis did his best to release the story on bombing Tokyo long ago. Several times he urged the White House that the American public should know the facts. Earlier, when the Japs released a picture of U. S. fliers supposedly captured in the Tokyo raid, Davis wanted to point out the truth, namely that these were naval fliers, not Doolittle's. They had been captured in a naval battle. This explanation was broadcast to foreign countries by OWI, but Davis, through no fault of his, was not permitted to tell folks at home.

FDR'S CONGRESSMAN

As commander-in-chief, the President has supreme powers in the conduct of the war, but he is just another citizen on the books of the Hyde Park, N. Y., rationing board.

At a recent White House meeting, the President was telling three congressmen, Gale, Republican, of Minnesota, Jackson, Democrat, of Washington, and Manasco, Democrat, of Alabama, about the "red tape" involved in buying meat and groceries on his trips home to Hyde Park.

"I have my problems with point rationing the same as you fellows," he grinned.

"Why don't you write your congressman?" suggested Republican Representative Gale.

The President reflected briefly, then threw up his hands and roared with laughter.

"Oh, no," he exclaimed, "not that!"

The man who represents the Hyde Park district in congress is Hamilton Fish, one of the most vitriolic, vituperative foes the President has in congress.

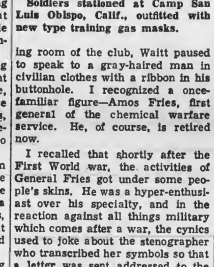
U. S. Army Is 'On Alert' For Chemical Warfare

Many Developments in Gas Warfare Date From World War I; America Thought to Have Greatest Potential Gas Offensive.



By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

Some days ago the British short wave radio, beamed on Germany, was telling the German people, who dared to listen to the forbidden words, that if their armies used gas against the Russians, the British would retaliate and paralyze the German cities with gas bombs from the air. Just about that same hour, I was entering the Army and Navy club in Washington with a short, vigorous, bright-eyed general, whose mental agility makes up for his lack of length. It was no coincidence. I was there to learn something more about chemical warfare and I knew of no better way than to pump Brig. Gen. Alden H. Waitt of the chemical warfare service and whose book "Gas Warfare" has sold out twice in Washington book stores.

There was, however, a coincidence connected with that visit, for as we walked into the great, crowded dining room of the club, Waitt paused to speak to a gray-haired man in civilian clothes with a ribbon in his buttonhole. I recognized a once-familiar figure—Amos Fries, first general of the chemical warfare service. He, of course, is retired now.

I recalled that shortly after the First World war, the activities of General Fries got under some people's skins. He was a hyper-enthusiast over his specialty, and in the reaction against all things military which comes after a war, the cynics used to joke about the stenographer who transcribed her symbols so that a letter was sent addressed to the "comical" warfare service.

New Emphasis

But Fries persisted and managed to preserve his unit in a tight little independent group instead of having its activities scattered all over the other services. As far as the public goes, very little attention has been paid to this arm of our military offense and defense. It may, however, become very prominent before the war is over and some people say that day is "imminent."

If gas comes, the United States will be prepared for it. From an organization with 94 officers in the thirties, the chemical warfare service has grown until its officer personnel numbers "many thousand" (I can't reveal the figure) and many of them are with combat troops today where they are responsible for the use of smoke screens and for incendiaries—the fire bombs and the flame throwers.

I have witnessed demonstrations at the Edgewood arsenal near Baltimore, and although I cannot report the details, I can say that some of the effects were remarkable. You ought to see a steel tank or a concrete pillbox go up in flames when it is "lighted" by a flame thrower. It is unbelievable to watch.

There have been, of course, many developments in this little-discussed weapon of warfare since gas was first used in World War I by the Germans and used so successfully and yet so stupidly. The attack took the British and French colonial troops utterly by surprise and caused what amounted to a rout. If the Germans had had the sense to follow it up, they could have broken through the lines and reached Calais.

That was not the first use of gas in warfare—the first recorded use was some time earlier—in fact, just 2,445 years earlier—at the siege of Plataea, when the Spartans burned wood saturated with pitch and sulphur under the walls. It failed because a rain came up. Five years later a similar "gas attack" was a complete success at the siege of Delium where the fumes drove the defenders from the city's walls in a panic.

Recent Developments

The most recent developments in gas warfare has just been revealed. The Allies have known for some time that the Germans had a new powerful gas which it is almost impossible to detect by smell. It can now be stated that this gas is nitrogen-mustard, a relative of the deadly, burning mustard gas of the last war but far more volatile and that much more effective, for it enters the lungs in greater quantities. It can also now be stated that the Americans are able to manufacture this gas rapidly and in quantity, if necessary. Our experts are thoroughly familiar with its characteristics.

The other development which will greatly increase the efficiency of the use of gas, if it is used today, is the new method of spraying it from low flying planes. This makes it possible to contaminate an area containing troops almost without warning.

However, it is believed that the United States is not only prepared with the best protection but probably has the most effective potential gas offensive weapons of any of the armies.

What are the arguments in favor of the use of this weapon which, so far, has not been used? Let me quote Brigadier General Waitt:

"Every sensible man is agreed that war should be resorted to only when all peaceful methods have failed. When, in order to sustain its policies, a nation has no other choice but to use force to gain its ends, it should do this with as little loss as possible. Not only should there be little loss to the nation itself but unnecessary loss to its enemy should be avoided. Victory depends on the amount of loss. The smaller the loss to both sides, the greater the victory to the victor. This may be strange doctrine but it is sound."

Unusual Outlook

"War," Waitt believes, "is not carried on to kill or destroy but rather to enforce a policy, and if possible, the enforcement should be accomplished without loss of life or property."

We can work toward this end by the use of gas. He points to these facts for his argument: There were 275,000 American casualties in the American ranks in the last war. More than one-fourth were caused by gas. Of the gas casualties, only about 2 per cent died. In other words, the men wounded by gas had about 12 times the chance to live as those wounded by other weapons.

To urge the use of gas sounds strange, indeed. I recall how surprised I was when a young Chinese captain, who had fought through most of the campaigns against Japan, said to me: "Gas is a kindly weapon." Of course, he had never met it himself but he had seen plenty of men blown apart by shrapnel and high explosive and he was very positive in his statement.

What about civilians if gas is used? In the first place, America, of course, is in less danger than Britain because of distance but not out of danger. There has been much contradictory opinion expressed as to the possibility of gassing cities. One view is that it would be utterly ineffective, the other is that whole populations could be blotted out. Waitt says both extreme views are wrong. That there is a middle ground, that gas can be used against industrial and political centers of importance for its disorganizing and demoralizing effect but that the chief targets will be strategic points such as railway stations, power and light plants and the like. Gas will not wipe out populations, he believes, it will not entirely supplant explosives. But it will be an effective weapon. The most important defense, aside from material means of protection which Waitt describes in detail, is education and discipline.

HEAD INJURIES

For a number of years I treated all the injured athletic students of a large university. Fortunately, most of the injuries were cuts, bruises, dislocations and occasional fractures, with not infrequent head injuries causing unconsciousness. For many years also I treated all the injured amateur and professional boxers and wrestlers in which head injuries were not uncommon. While most cases of head concussion recovered consciousness in minutes and often seconds. I often wondered if I made them take sufficient rest before resuming athletic activities.

This whole question of how soon after a blow that has caused unconsciousness, the patient should resume his regular occupation, has been studied by Dr. H. Cairns: some of his findings are recorded in the Proceedings of the Royal Society of Medicine.

"In deciding when a patient should be fit to return to work, it is necessary to bear in mind the severity of his injury, and the best yardstick at present available is the length of time he was unconscious after the injury. The shortest time in which ability to carry out full work may be expected to return is as follows:

"If unconscious for five minutes to one hour—four to six weeks.

"If unconscious one to 24 hours—six to eight weeks.

"If unconscious one to seven days—two to four months.

"If unconscious over seven days—four to eight months.

"If patient was very tired when injured, more time should be given. The type of work must also be considered as a simple task may be resumed earlier than one which calls for much brain effort.

"Almost every patient who makes a full recovery from concussion suffers at a certain stage of his recovery from headaches. In mild cases headaches usually occur early and disappear, whereas in more severe cases headaches appear much later, in fact after patient is well enough to return home though not to work."

America Becoming Near-Sighted Nation

There was a time when a man or woman wearing glasses was thought to be a student or one who did a great deal of reading. Glasses were almost a badge of scholarship. It was a rare thing to see a child with glasses and many wearing glasses were doing so to correct a squint or crossed eye.

Within the last 20 years there has been a great increase in the number of men and women wearing glasses and glasses on school children no longer attract attention.

Most of us will likely attribute this increase in the number wearing glasses to the examination of the eyes of school children and to the education by departments of health of the importance of having the vision corrected in those afflicted with shortsightedness, longsightedness and astigmatism (objects not seen distinctly). The last war also taught the value of acquiring proper glasses as many men were rejected for poor eyesight.

However, we learn from the Better Vision Institute in one of their monthly releases that America is becoming a nearsighted nation. Every 10 years the figures show that vision is becoming narrower and human eyes, which from the beginning of history had been adapted to far vision, have now their sharpest vision when fixed on near objects not very far from the end of the nose.

What is causing the population to become nearsighted?

Some research workers on the eye state that (a) living conditions today finds man looking at "near" objects instead of "far" or distant objects, and (b) nearsightedness seems to be handed down from parents to their children.

Today, education has become almost universal and children start to read at an early age. Occupations are indoors for the most part and modern living conditions require almost continuous close vision.

We should, therefore, be kind to our eyes, and if our eyes need help make sure that they get help, and the right kind of help.

SPEAKING of SPORTS

By Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

ALTHOUGH the new wartime baseball has been endowed officially with quite lively qualities, those comparatively few outstanding batsmen remaining in the game are prone to argue the point.

Rubber has given way to balata compound in the composition of today's ball. Experts say it lacks the jackrabbit tendencies which enabled clubs to pile up topheavy home run records.

A Detroit scribe questioned the Tigers after a recent game with the Pirates. And, he declared, "you can take the word of the Tigers for it, the ball that will be used in the American league this season is deader than a fossil fish."

Roger Craner, veteran Tiger outfielder, summarized the situation thus:

"When I hit that ball I thought I had whacked a hollow stump. Although I didn't know that the ball had been changed, I was suspicious. (Manager Steve O'Neill hadn't told the boys that the 1943 ball was being used.) I naturally concluded that somebody had deadened the balls by putting them in the ice box. You know, some teams used to do that with the old ball once in a while, when they thought a dead ball might do them some good. But when Steve told us we had been using new balls, I knew that we would be blasting no rabbits this season."

Nothing New

The balata model stirs the memories of old timers who were familiar with the dead ball. In 1913, J. Franklin Baker, infielder with the Philadelphia Athletics, earned the name "Home Run" Baker by clouting the terrific total of 11 home runs.

That same year the eight teams of the American league hit 158 home runs. Philadelphia led with 33, New York trailed with eight. In 1942, the American league home run total was 533. The National total was 538. The Yankees had the leadership in the American league with 108. The Giants topped theirs with 109.

The fast ball didn't make its appearance until 1919. In 1920, Babe Ruth went to New York and started with his big bat to establish a myriad of records. In 22 years played in the majors he compiled a total of 714 home runs, hitting 40 or more in 11 different years and establishing a record of 60 round trips in 1927. His lifetime major league batting average was .341.

Contrast that with "Home Run" Baker's record. How much the lively ball can help batters is apparent by the increase in hitting noted previously, the mounting home run and extra base hit totals and the ever-growing .300 division.

Sisler's Record

The career of one man is worth considering when weighing the merits of the rabbit ball against those of the lively ball. George Sisler is the individual in question. One of the greatest players of all time, his career lasted eight years, until eye trouble stopped him. He batted against the dead ball for five years and against the lively one in his last three years.

Against the dead ball, Sisler's five-year average was .330. His highest season batting average was .353 and his largest total of hits was 190.

Against the lively ball he had a three-year average of .399. His largest number of hits was 257 and his best batting average was .420.

Ty Cobb, Harry Heilmann and others who were up against both types of ball said that the lively ball traveled 50 to 60 feet farther than the dead one.

But—one thing must be kept in mind. The public likes plenty of hitting. John Q. Fan prefers home runs to stolen bases. Proof of that lies in the fact that American league attendance increased more than one million in 1937, one of the heaviest hitting seasons. The number of hits is often reflected in the box office.

Yank Fights Jap To Death in Sea

Hefty Wallop on the Jaw And Foe Goes Down.

BOSTON.—Wounded and thrown overboard when his transport sank, a 23-year-old coast guardsman choked and drowned a Japanese sailor after a terrific struggle in Guadalcanal waters, the First naval district disclosed.

Machinist Mate George T. Rhodes of Awendaw, S. C., told how, despite three shrapnel wounds, he swam to aid a struggling figure he mistook for a shipmate.

A sudden burst of flame from his burning ship identified the swimmer as a Japanese seconds before the other grabbed his throat and attempted to tear off his life-jacket.

"I was weak from loss of blood and couldn't do much at first," Mr. Rhodes said. "We fought in the water and under it for I don't know how long and I could hear him muttering in Japanese."

Mr. Rhodes said he finally loosened the sailor's grip and swung at him with his fist.

"It was kind of hard swinging in the water with my lifejacket on but I managed to give him a good wallop on the chin and he gurgled and went down. That's the last I saw of him," Mr. Rhodes added.

After he saw the Japanese sink, Mr. Rhodes said, he "didn't feel so well" but realized that he had to swim out of the way of cruising sharks to a liferaft.

As soon as he reached the liferaft some hours later, searchlights from Japanese warships concentrated on it, and Mr. Rhodes and three companions had to dive overboard to escape machine gun, shell and mortar fire.

It was only after an invasion boat picked them up at dawn that he realized that shrapnel had wounded him three times—in the jaw, foot and leg.

For his part in the battle, Mr. Rhodes, who is a member of the coast guard Invaders, was awarded the army's Purple Heart—the second coast guardsman in history to receive the award. He is now on temporary duty in Boston headquarters.

Train Jaunt, Bold Face Almost Get Boy in Navy

CHICAGO. — James Pettery Jr. wanted to join the navy and see the world but all he got was a swell train ride. Jimmy is 14 years old.

Four days ago at Charleston, W. Va., Jimmy hid his 113 pounds on a train he knew was taking recruits to the Great Lakes naval training station near Chicago. Next morning, when the train stopped at Cincinnati, Jimmy put on a bold face and the feed bag along with the bona fide recruits. The unit leader was puzzled when the restaurant cashier told him 48 meals had been served to a group supposedly numbering 47.

"Is there anyone here who doesn't belong with us?" he asked. None of the recruits said anything. Jimmy didn't say anything. They all got back on the train.

But when it pulled in at the training station yesterday, Jimmy fell victim to the navy's habit of counting heads. Desperately, he protested: "But I'll be 15 in July."

The discipline officer turned Jimmy over to the Red Cross, which put him aboard a train for his home town, Hetzel, W. Va.

Kin of Anthem Author Is Convicted of Murder

LONDON.—Derek Lees-Smith, 20-year-old student, was convicted of murder of his mother, but was adjudged insane and ordered detained "during the King's pleasure," an indefinite term.

Lees-Smith was accused of stabbing and choking his mother, Mrs. Marion Scott Key Lees-Smith, who claimed kinship with Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner." She was found dead December 31.

The prosecution claimed the youth had signed a statement admitting that he killed his mother after she complained of beer on his breath.

Has His Wallet Stolen, It's Found and Returned

BATON ROUGE, LA.—Several months ago William D. Bridges was robbed by a man who accosted him on the street, pinned his arms down and seized his wallet.

The man fled and Bridges chased him several blocks. Recently a dredge boat worker restored the wallet to Bridges' family. The Negro who robbed him evidently had become frightened when he was chased and threw it into the Mississippi river, which washed it back to the shore. Bridges' money, $103, was intact.

A Blouse Will Give to Your Suit the 'Touch That Tells'

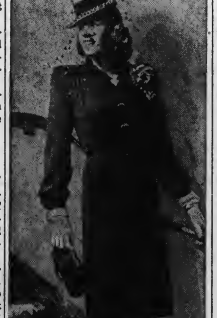
By CHERIE NICHOLAS

VARIETY above the waistline is the big idea this season, and your change of costume will, often as not, be merely a change of blouse. Lovely teammates for your new suits are the myriads of stunning blouses that this season are fairly stampeding the fashion picture.

The triumph of the blouse in the present-day vogue is to be attributed in a large degree to the luxuriant rayon fabrics that yield so charmingly to artful and versatile styling. The range of smart rayons that go to make up this season's tremendous showing in blouses runs the gamut from gossamer chiffons and marquisettes to crisp taffetas and soft draping crepes, also shantungs and the voguish failles. In this galaxy of smart new rayon weaves you will find checks and stripes vying for popularity with plaids and gorgeous prints. Fine rayon sheers in exquisite pastels, black, navy and other dark tones compete with snowy whites.

There is something very dressy and exquisitely feminine and refined about the blouse that is made of chalk white rayon crepe with ruffflings of lace at the throat, down the front fastening and about the wrist bands of the new long shirt sleeves. Rayon sheers in pastel or white with long sleeves or short have a bright future before them. These are styled with extreme simplicity.

Flattery is the word that keynotes the entire scheme of things in blouse design for this season. Emphasis is especially on new necklines. Classic shirt waist types in fine acetate rayon crepe, also smooth acetate jersey, are shown with youthful peter pan collars this year, the high round line fitting nicely over cardigan jackets and sweaters, as well as giving a nice, neat look for jacketless wear with slacks, shorts or sports skirts. The print blouse that flaunts such bizarre colors this season glories in huge bows of self print at the throat for feminine flattery.



The Illustration presents a trio of important blouse fashions, each having a story of new fashion trends to tell. The simple black sheer blouse has a surprise "up its sleeve" in that it is reversible. It is really made on one side of black sheer, and the reverse side is of the same filmy chiffon in a pretty beige tone. Wear the dark side out for daytime. For evening glamour turn it inside out. It's a new idea, this of the reversible rayon chiffon blouse, and it is going over big.

An unusual scarf neckline adds special fashion interest to the striking tuck-in blouse of crisp rayon taffeta shown. The taffeta is richly colorful in its checked patterning, which is done in vivid purple, gold and rose. This is the sort of blouse that combines with a skirt to achieve the new blouse-costume look that is featured so prominently this season.

There is a definitely new style appeal in the jacket-like overblouse that makes sophisticated simplicity its theme, as may be noted in the model centered above in the group. In pastel tones, strictly tailored and beautiful in ultra-simplicity these jacket blouses of luxurious rayon crepe, designed to wear with or without a suit jacket, are making wide appeal to women of discriminating taste. The crepe for this model in the original is in pale rose-petal pink. Note the fly-front closing and the distinctive pointed neckline. Done in the new lilac tone, this blouse would be very lovely topped with a little hat of violets and green leaves.

Style-Plus

The softly tailored one-piece dress in navy is a fashion favorite this season. Here it is shown made of navy faille crepe. The new color fad is navy with purple, and this costume subscribes to the trend. The shoulder bouquet is of purple violets and the buttons are formed of purple beads. The ruffled collar makes a flattering neckline, while the new trouser pockets give fashion interest to the skirt.

Crochet Millinery

Crochet hats are the smart idea in millinery. They are fashioned just as straws would be, with brims and crowns. The flowers are all crocheted in realistic colorings, and for a tailored effect there are crochet bands, some fastened with crochet buttons.

Prefer Two-Piece Slacks for Summer

For the summer, warplant workers are showing an increasing interest in two-piece jacket slack ensembles rather than one piece overall or coverall types.

The two-piece models are exceedingly attractive in their pretty pastel colors. Plastic buttons in contrast colors impart extra charm. While most of the outfits are in solid color, there is also wide demand for contrasting jackets and slacks.

The entire scheme of things in the way of war-work clothes design revolves around creating apparel from the viewpoint of safety—no fluttery ruffles, or extending pockets, or flaring trouser hems that can catch in machinery.

The sturdiness of denim makes it the favorite material, and gabardine is also favored.

Forecast the Return of The 'Chemise' Dresses

The straight-hanging frock that takes a minimum of material, depending on a front tie belt to give it shapeliness, is, according to reports from style headquarters, destined to play a leading role in the coming fashion picture. As a fall prospect, and even now it is being accepted for immediate wear. Designers, inspired by a desire to conserve fabric, are turning their attention to this new trend, and we may expect interesting developments.

Fanciful Hemline

Hemlines have gone in for decorative treatments. The black sheers take on a narrow ruffling of lace. Wool dresses and crepes are finished off with self-fabric pleatings and box-pleated ruches. Points, scallops and ribbon also outline hemlines. Young girls are wearing navy dresses with frilly eyelet embroidery peeking from under the hemline.

BETTY HUTTON picked up a new honor the other day; the committee in charge of Dartmouth's spring party week asked her to attend as guest of honor, and told her that she'd been elected "the girl we would like to have Dartmouth co-eds resemble—if we had co-eds. You'll probably refuse the invitation," they added, "so will you kindly send us a dozen autographed pictures of yourself?" Betty certainly had to refuse; she's booked way ahead for pictures. The latest announcement is that she'll be teamed with Diana Lynn in "The Well-Groomed Bride."

Plan the size of your chest to fill your needs and space. It may be made of one-inch pine and should be about 17 inches high without the cushion. Make the flounce with double fullness—that is, twice as long as the space it is to fill after it is gathered. The cushion may be filled with cotton padding, feathers or down.

When armored knights met, it was customary for each knight to raise the visor of his helmet as a means of identification. This gesture has come down through all armies in the form of the salute. Traditional, too, is the Army man's preference for Camel cigarettes. With men in the Army, Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard, actual sales records in their service stores show that Camel is the favorite. It's one of the favorite gifts with service men. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. "I'm tired tonight —and I'm proud of it!"

Yes, Tom is going home tired tonight . . . just like last night . . . and the night before. Tired and proud!

You see, Tom is a typical member of the Southern Railway Family. And when America was plunged into war, something happened to him . . . and to the forty-two thousand men and women who make up this Family.

Overnight, every Southern railroader became a soldier . . . every Southern car and locomotive became a weapon of war . . . every transportation job, a chance to hasten America's day of final Victory.

Since Pearl Harbor, this mighty army has struck many powerful blows for freedom . . . by keeping the wheels rolling under the biggest transportation load in all the long history of the Southern Railway System.

Rain and shine, day and night, troop trains and war freight . . . tank cars and passenger trains . . . are rolling continuously and swiftly on the Southern.

It's a big job . . . a tough job . . . a vital job. But it's being done . . . and done right!

That's why Tom and the other men and women of the Southern are tired when they go home from the job these days . . . and "proud of it."

They're proud, too, because they know that the work they are doing so well today is paving the way for the new and greater Southland that lies beyond the Victory they're helping to win.

BACK TO THIS?

..not if you take good care of your

Electric Washer

It would be irksome indeed to go back to the drudgery of wash tub and scrub board. But you won't have to if you take ordinary good care of your washer. Just give it the proper attention and it will serve you faithfully for the duration.

TIPS ON WASHER CARE

- Drain, rinse and dry washer tub after each use.
- Remove any soap curd or lint from tub, agitator or suction cups with soft cloth or sponge.
- Dry rolls and frame of wringer. Release pressure on wringer to save springs and rubber.
- Wipe connecting cord dry and hang up carefully. Avoid kinking. It cracks rubber insulation.
- Do not try to jam too many pieces through wringer at one time.
- Remove buckles, large buttons, etc., before running clothes through the wringer. Saves rolls from being chewed up.
- Do not overload washer with clothes and do not use too much water. Follow directions.
- Lubricate washer periodically in accordance with manufacturer's recommendations.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox, Jr. Lieut. Kelly has told how he was sent to the tunnel hospital on Corregidor, where he met a nurse named Peggy. Survivors from the sinking of a shipload of refugees were brought to the hospital, and patients from Manila were moved there. From them he learned how badly the war was going for us. A member of the tank corps is speaking.

CHAPTER IV

"What happened to your tank?"

"We were lying on our side in that paddy, and the Japs would come over and look at us. We played possum in there all day. They tried to open our door with bayonets, but we had it locked. In the afternoon a Jap officer looked at us through the slots—all of us lying still, holding breath, and then he said, in English, 'They're all dead.'

"But we figured it was a trick—kept right on playing possum and, sure enough, in about an hour they came back for another look. But we were lying in exactly the same positions. This time they gave a few disgusted grunts and walked off. About an hour after dark we listened carefully, and then unlocked our door. Sure enough, they'd gone, so we beat it for the road.'

"'Tell me what became of your shoes,' I asked him. I couldn't figure how an experienced soldier would ever let himself get separated from his shoes. The kid grinned sheepishly. 'I guess that was a damn-fool trick,' he said. 'You see it had been hotter than hell in that tank, and we were all dirty and tired and sweaty, so we decided to take a bath in a creek just across the rice paddy. But we had to go through mud to get there, so, keeping our clothes on until we got to the water hole, we took off our shoes and hid them in the tall grass. But when we got back we hunted for several hours, and we couldn't find that grass clump. Finally we started on, barefooted.'

"'But where were the Japs?'

"'They'd gone on ahead toward Manila. The next night we were resting by the roadside. We heard a noise behind us, so we scooted low in the bushes by the side of the road, and saw more of them go by on bicycles—all headed toward Manila. It seemed to be a Jap reconnaissance patrol, because behind them came trucks and guns and infantry, going by in the dark—so close we could have reached out and touched them. If we'd had a machine gun, we could have wiped out several hundred, but we only had our 45's. They kept up most of that night—one group stopped and ate chow on the road bank opposite us; we were scared stiff they'd come over and find us. It was hard for the wounded to lie quiet. Our tank driver had a rivet stuck in his throat—every time he took a drink, the water would come leaking out—and the radio operator's arm was full of shrapnel from an exploding bullet. The rest of us were okay, but our feet were getting damned sore.

"'At dawn we stopped by a native village to collect some shoes, but their feet were all too small.'

"'How'd they treat you?'

"'Fine—gave us all the food we could eat, but you could see they didn't want us around. Afraid the Japs would find us hiding there and shoot them too. You couldn't blame the natives. So we got out, and spent the other six days of the trip sleeping in ditches or brush clumps, walking nights.'

"'Were the wounded weak?'

"'Sure, and so were we. The tank driver with the hole in his throat wanted to stop—said for us to leave him behind. We were afraid the Japs would get him and we couldn't spare him a gun—we had only three 45's for the six of us.'

"'What did you do, carry him?'

"'Hell, no. We gave him a 45, told him he'd better use it now if he wasn't coming with us. So he changed his mind, and decided to come on. He made it, too. But it took plenty of guts.'

"None of them lacked that." Here Kelly shook his head. "Sometimes training, often equipment, but never guts.

"But getting back to that hospital. I went back to my bunk. Peggy helped me get my arm settled, and we talked a little bit. She was a smart girl. Having been with the Regular Army, she knew real soldiers when she saw them, and you didn't have to talk long with these poor brave kids who were so green they forgot their shoes to know what the score was. Here we were, trying to hold off the Japs with less than two thousand regulars, plus these green kids who had really been sent here to polish off their training, plus thousands of Filipino boys just as brave but just as green, most of whom had never been in uniform until a few weeks before the war started.

"'Where in hell's the navy?' they'd ask me. 'Why aren't they bringing us tanks and planes and more men? It only takes two weeks to get here from Pearl Harbor.' Of course none of them knew what had happened at Pearl Harbor.

"'They'll be along,' I'd say 'Any day now.'

"'Hell,' they'd say disgustedly. 'We won't see them for six months.'

"'Suppose we don't,' I'd say. 'This place can last six months. Wasn't it built like Malta and Gibraltar—to withstand siege?'

"Only pretty quick I began to find out how wrong I was. Corregidor had been built years ago, and then we'd agreed not to modernize if the Japs didn't modernize the Carolines. We kept the agreement; they didn't. Anyway, ammunition and provisions were so short the Rock would be doing good to hold out three months.

"A few days after that the nurses in my ward were buzzing around—I heard some talk about a party they were giving in their quarters that evening, inviting their boy friends, who for the most part were young army officers stationed on the Rock. And I almost fell out of my cot that afternoon when Peggy, in a seemingly offhand way, asked me if I'd like to go. It was nice, of course, to be chosen, by the girl I liked best, out of 10,999 other men on that Rock, most of whom would have given an ear just to talk to a white girl. But it got me to thinking, too. I liked her, but the other girls had said there was a young medical officer she'd been dating pretty steady—and what the hell was I? A naval officer in an army hospital—here today, gone tomorrow—so I hadn't let myself get started thinking—or tried not to, anyway.

"Sure enough, in about an hour they came back for another look."

"Naturally, I said sure I wanted to go. So Peggy said she'd see if she could fix it with the doctor. And after she got through with him, he was certain it would do me good, if I was back in the ward by ten.

"Here in Newport maybe you wouldn't think it was much of a party. But it was a swell night, with a big moon hanging over Manila Bay—peaceful—and best of all, the girls had broken out with their civilian dresses. That doesn't sound like much, but one look at them after seeing nothing but uniforms for months was like a trip back home. Makeup too—they looked so damned nice you could eat them with a spoon, and Peggy had put just a touch of perfume in her hair—anyway if it wasn't that, it was something. What did we do? Well, danced to a portable—I'll bet we played 'Rose of San Antone' a dozen times—and Peggy and I figured out a way we could dance with my arm in a sling. And afterward we sat out on the grass and talked. I remember somebody saying, 'You think they'll ever bomb this place?' Of course we knew eventually they would, but that night the war seemed a thousand miles away. Only somebody spoiled it all by asking Peggy when this medical officer was getting back from Bataan, and she said she thought tomorrow.

"Next day I was out in the courtyard getting some fresh air," Lieutenant Kelly, who was invalided in the tunnel hospital at Corregidor continued: "I was allowed a certain number of hours per day out of my bunk—when the air-raid alarm went off, but by now we didn't pay any attention. I looked up to notice that nine Jap planes were going overhead, but what the hell, they did that all the time, and of course the anti-aircraft opened up—just a formality, because they were up out of range—when all of a sudden—Bam! the whole Rock seemed to jump, and we made a dive for the tunnel, because at last they were bombing us.

"It was quite a pasting. Half an hour later a batch of nurses came in in an ambulance—pretty well shaken up. They'd been strafed—had to leave the ambulance and gun for the roadside ditches. A few minutes later the wounded began to come in—all the serious cases went into my ward. They had only two operating tables, so the others were lined up, waiting their turn, while the nurses pitched in and took care of the minor surgery — cleaning wounds, digging for shrapnel, bandaging. There was no time for anesthetics except a quarter of a grain of morphine, but the wounded certainly had guts. They'd grab the side of their litter with clenched fists, and tell the nurses to go to it—it really wasn't hurting much.

"The raid had been going an hour when all of a sudden the lights went out, but in half a minute the girls had produced flashlights. I remember Peggy standing there holding a flashlight on a guy's naked back on the operating table while a doctor probed for some shrapnel in his kidney. You could see her face and those steady blue-green eyes of hers by the light reflected back up from this guy's back, and just then there was a terrific crunching bang—a bomb had landed right outside the tunnel entrance—and with it a sudden blast of air through the tunnel. It wasn't nice, and yet I don't think Peggy's hand even wobbled.

"Presently the lights came on, and we found one hospital-corps man had crawled under a bed. He wasn't even sheepish. 'You're damn right I was scared,' he said. 'Thought the whole place was coming down on us.' Peggy's flashlight beam on that naked back had not moved. Hell of a fine, nervy girl to have in a war. Or any other time.

"But it was getting on toward New Year's, and bad news began to come from Manila. The Japs were closing in."

"But very few of them realized it in Manila," said Akers. "I was there with my boat on courier duty from December 13 until Manila fell. Staying with Admiral Hart until the seaplane took him out to join the Dutch East Indies fleet.

"You certainly couldn't criticize morale. The average Filipino had a childish belief in us. He was absolutely certain that the Americans would be there next week with plenty of equipment. Dead-sure that our American soldiers would throw back the Japanese. Believed all the optimistic broadcasts and rumors.

"When a raid would come, of course, they were pretty excitable. We slept aboard the boat, and when the bombs started down, we were supposed to get away from the wharf and out into the bay. Sometimes people used to stow away, to get away from the bombs.

"They never lost faith, though. Right up to the end there were big dances at the Manila Hotel, and you could watch the Filipino boys in uniform, telling their girls about their heroic exploits. And there were plenty of them to tell, too.

"But over at the American Army and Navy Club, they knew what the score was. They didn't feel like dancing there. Their faces were plenty long.

"Of course the higher-up Filipinos knew the truth. If you'd see one with a long face, you could be sure he was a Senator, or better.

"I had a girl there—Dolores was her first name, and by American standards she was good-looking as hell. Her father was a Spaniard from Catalonia and her mother was a mestiza. She'd been elected Miss Philippines a year or so before. Fairly tall and lithe, with big black eyes and enough of the Oriental so you'd never forget her face among the other brunettes you know.

"Her father I think was a Senator, and the family had a hell of a lot of money. His brother owned a lot of mines. They had a big colonial house in the suburbs. Usually when I was invited out she'd send a car down for me, but the first time I was coming out alone she said never mind about directions—and so it turned out. Every traffic cop I met knew just who they were and could point me on my way. So they were really big shots on the island.

"Her father knew what the score was, although Dolores didn't dream it was coming so soon. The last time I saw her, just before the Japs came in, she knew Manila had been declared an open city, but she thought that only meant there wouldn't be any more bombs. All that night the southern army had been moving through Manila, trying to get to Bataan before they were cut off, but she didn't know what the marching meant. That night her uncle, a tough old Spaniard who had mines all over the world, got pretty drunk and almost had a row with her father, the Senator.

"The uncle said the whole mess was the fault of this opposition faction of Filipino politicians hollering their silly heads off for independence—no wonder the Americans, if they were getting out in four more years, hadn't socked a lot of money into fortifications. Then he cussed the Filipino politicians out for not appropriating money for the army—they'd set MacArthur up with a big salary and a penthouse, and then hardly given him a dime to train and equip an army—it was all window-dressing.

"He said he wasn't so worried about himself because he owned plenty of property outside the islands. But he told the Senator he'd probably end up pulling a rickhsa for his part in this independence foolishness, and serve him damned well right. So I could see there were a few natives who knew what the score was.

PETER AND JOHN PREACH TO SAMARITANS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 8:14-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest.—John 4:35.

The Church as it grows has problems, and so God calls leaders to serve Him in meeting and settling them for His glory and the good of the Church.

Philip had gone to Samaria (as a result of the first persecution of the Church) and there he had been used of God to bring many to faith in Christ. Now that the new groups of believers needed guidance and instruction, Peter and John were sent to help them (v. 14).

A proper understanding of, and attitude toward, God's gracious gift of salvation is of first importance. New converts must recognize that it is a gift: that it cannot be earned or bought, and that it issues in a life of service and testimony.

All three of these matters are covered in our lesson.

I. Spiritual Life and Power Is God's Gift to Believers (vv. 14-17).

The Holy Spirit was received by these early members of the Church by the laying on of the apostles' hands, but later He came directly into the believer's heart the moment he had faith in God. This is now our blessed privilege, and the provision for our every need as followers of Christ, to recognize the indwelling Holy Spirit.

What a glorious truth it is that the believer is indwelt by the Holy Spirit, He who is a divine person, not just a power or influence (I Cor. 6:19). Thus every believer, including the humblest as well as the greatest, has in him the One who gives spiritual life and power, who gives grace for holy living, and empowers for service.

The greatest power in all the world—the power of the infinite God—is thus available to every true and yielded believer, as God's free gift.

Gone then is all boasting of our own strength, and gone are all excuses for weak and careless living. The power and grace are His, and He gives them to us as His gift. Christian friend, are you allowing the Holy Spirit who dwells in you, to infill and use you as He will?

II. Spiritual Life and Power Cannot Be Bought by Works or Money (vv. 18-24).

Men of this world are so used to putting their trust in money that they come to think that one can buy anything. To them every man and every desirable thing must have its price. Let us be clear that there are men who cannot be bought, and that the best things in life bear no price tag. A mother's love, friendship, fellowship with God—priceless they are, but not for sale.

Above all let it be clear that eternal life, and the power of God the Holy Spirit, cannot be gained by piling up good works, nor by payment in the coin of this world.

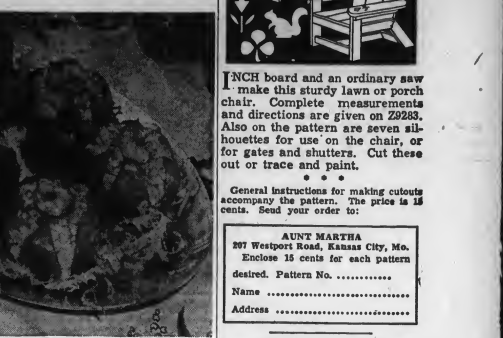
Simon Magus wanted this power to improve his business as a magician. He made a very gross proposal, but one wonders whether he was any more to be censured than many in the Church today who are doing the same thing, though by more cultured and skillful methods.

Not only are there those who are trying to buy their own way into heaven, but also those who by holding the purse strings, try to control the message of the preacher. What about those who by their financial gifts seek to gain control of church organizations?

Their efforts are doomed to ultimate failure—God will see to that!—but in the meantime they do much harm to the cause of Christ. Many a church and pastor would like to rise up and say with Peter, "Thy money perish with thee."

III. Spiritual Life and Power Should Result in Testimony (v. 25).

Peter and John set the Samaritan Christians a good example as they went back to Jerusalem, by permitting the Holy Spirit to use them to testify and to teach the Word of the Lord in many of their villages.

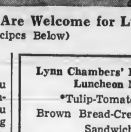


One of the great hindrances to the carrying out of the great commission has been that Christians have received spiritual life, and even spiritual power, as though it were something for their own gratification or comfort. God saves us to serve Him in testimony and in life.

The Holy Spirit does not speak of Himself. He guides the believer in all truth (John 16:13), particularly the truth regarding Christ. The Spirit's primary interest is to glorify Christ (John 16:14).

It follows then that the Spirit-filled believer will be busy about speaking for Christ and glorifying His name. The Holy Spirit is ready to teach even the words to say that Christ may be lifted up and men be saved.

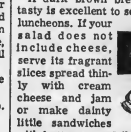
Peter and John, as good leaders of these new Samaritan believers, gave them by word and example a good foundation for growth in grace and usefulness to Christ.



Tulip-Shaped Tomatoes Are Welcome for Luncheon
(See Recipes Below)

Spring Luncheon

Rationing doesn't mean that you have to give up entertaining entirely. True, you may be serving dishes you've never served before, but if you've tucked your thinking cap at the right angle, you'll find many things with company manners which won't take too many ration points.



Be clever with your knives in shaping fruits and vegetables into attractive shapes and sizes for your guests, and use bright colors for garnishes and table accessories. Add a good portion of your own charm to make your guests feel at ease, and Madame, your entertaining will be a success!

Tulip-like tomatoes are a picture on any spring luncheon table.

Tulip Tomatoes Filled With Shrimp.
(Serves 6)

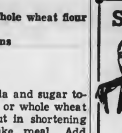
- 6 tomatoes
- 1 cup finely diced celery
- 2 cups canned shrimp
- ¼ cup french dressing
- ½ cup mayonnaise
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- Dash of cayenne pepper

Cut tomatoes in sixths with sharp knife, cutting through outside of tomatoes, and just enough so that each section can be pulled back to form a petal. Marinate shrimp in french dressing for ½ hour. Drain, then combine with celery, mayonnaise, lemon juice and cayenne pepper. Chill. Sprinkle inside of tomatoes with salt, then fill with shrimp mixture. Garnish with whole shrimp.

Smart idea for salad plates is to include a small scoop of two or three different kinds of salad to make a picture plate. Here are two splendid ideas:

Lemon Sunshine Salad.
(Serves 6)

- 1 package lemon-flavored gelatin
- 1 cup boiling water
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice or diluted vinegar
- 1 cup cold water
- 1 cup finely shredded cabbage
- ½ cup finely grated raw carrot
- 1 tablespoon minced onion



Dissolve lemon-flavored gelatin in boiling water. Add salt and lemon juice or diluted vinegar and cold water. Chill until mixture begins to thicken, then add remaining ingredients. Do not shred vegetables until just before using or a large loss of vitamins will result.

Pineapple-Cottage Cheese Salad.
(Serves 6)

- ¾ cup cottage cheese
- ¼ cup nuts, chopped
- 1 tablespoon pineapple juice
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 6 slices pineapple, fresh or canned
- Green or red pepper
- Lettuce
- ¾ cup salad dressing

Combine cottage cheese, pineapple juice and sugar. Add salt to taste. Place a mound of cheese on top of each slice of pineapple, then garnish with diamond shapes from green and red pepper. Serve on crisp lettuce with dressing.

A dark brown bread, fruity and tasty is excellent to serve with salad luncheons. If your salad does not include cheese, serve its fragrant slices spread thinly with cream cheese and jam or make dainty little sandwiches with butter spread thinly, add a bit of lettuce for crispness.

Baked Brown Bread.
(Makes 1 14x3x2-inch loaf)

- 1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
- 2½ teaspoons soda
- 1½ teaspoons salt
- ½ cup sugar
- 2 cups graham or whole wheat flour
- ⅛ cup shortening
- 1 cup seedless raisins
- 2 eggs, beaten
- 2 cups sour milk
- ½ cup molasses

Sift flour, salt, soda and sugar together. Add graham or whole wheat flour, mix well. Cut in shortening until mixture is like meal. Add raisins and mix. Beat eggs, add sour milk and molasses. Add dry ingredients and blend together thoroughly. Pour batter into a well-greased pan. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven.

A lot of good quality protein, vitamins and minerals come in that neat little package, the egg! Right now you'll be finding they're plentiful, so make good use of them:

Eggs Creole.
(Serves 4)

- 2½ cups tomatoes
- 1 small onion, chopped fine
- ½ green pepper, chopped
- 1 teaspoon green pepper
- ¾ cup fine bread crumbs
- ½ cup celery
- 4 eggs
- ¼ cup grated American cheese
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- 1 bay leaf

Cook tomatoes, pepper, onion, celery and seasonings together with bay leaf for 10 minutes. Strain, add bread crumbs. Place sauce in individual casserole dishes. Break eggs on top and sprinkle with salt, pepper and grated cheese. Bake in a moderate oven until eggs have set and cheese is melted.

Oatmeal puts plenty of vitamin B1 into diets and keeps you stepping with pep and energy the day long. Try these delicious cookies:

Honey Oatmeal Hermits.

- 1½ cups honey
- 2 eggs
- ⅔ cup lard or other fat
- ½ cup warm water
- 2 cups quick-cooking oatmeal
- 2 cups flour
- 1 teaspoon soda
- 2 teaspoons baking powder
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1 cup raisins or chopped dates

Cream honey and fat until smooth and creamy. Add well beaten eggs and oatmeal. Add sifted dry ingredients alternately with warm water, saving only a small amount of flour to dredge raisins or dates. Blend in fruit and mix thoroughly. Drop by spoonfuls, 3 inches apart on a greased baking sheet. Bake 15 minutes in a moderate (350-degree) oven for 15 minutes.

Lynn Says:

Nice to Know: Waxed paper wrappers from bread are good for wiping the top of the lid top range.

Use grapefruit shells for serving fruit or seafood cocktail if you don't have enough dishes.

Iron rust may be quickly removed from white clothes if you squeeze lemon juice on the spot, sprinkle salt over it and place it in the sun. Repeat if the first application does not work.

Use warm water instead of cold for mixing flour for gravy. The use of a rotary egg beater helps smooth out lumps if they should occur.

You'll save time if you have an extra set of measuring spoons in the coffee container, and to keep a measuring cup in each container of flour, oatmeal and sugar. It saves time and encourages accuracy in measurements.

Gen. Eisenhower's Name Means 'Iron Chopper'

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower ("Ike" to the Doughboys) was ice works hand, boxer, cowboy and professional footballer before going to West Point.

His ancestors left Germany in the 18th century to avoid religious persecution, emigrated to America in 1732. The name means "Iron chopper," which is appropriate for our leading tank expert.

"Ike" is 52. His soldiers swear by him—say he's both tough and lucky. He was certainly lucky when, as a young officer, he arrested a Negro National Guardsman who had run amok in Chicago. The Negro pulled out a revolver and fired five shots at him at almost point-blank range. They all missed.

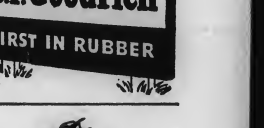
SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Airplanes now transport workers and supplies to South American rubber forests in hours. Until we placed rubber on the "have not" list in the U. S., weeks and months were consumed in carrying supplies to the rubber tappers.

When one considers that for more than 20 years car and truck owners were encouraged to abandon the idea through various forms of road hard quarantines, it must be acknowledged that a laudable patriotism is being shown by them now in conserving their rubber supplies.

Remember the days when 20 pounds pressure per cross section inch was the standard inflation recommendation? Rough riding and flats were the order of the day.



A new highway has been constructed to the Mercapata gold mines in Peru. But rubber is the most important item being carried over it.

BEDTIME STORY

PETER RABBIT TRIES TO DO THE RIGHT THING

PETER RABBIT learned a long time ago that when he had done a mean or unkind thing he never could feel right in his own mind until he had admitted the wrong and said he was sorry. It was hard to do this sometimes, but afterward he always felt so much better that he often wondered why everybody didn't do the same way. You see Peter is alone a great deal, particularly when he is at home in the dear Old Briar Patch, and when he is alone somehow that little small voice down inside that seems always trying to have him do right will keep talking in spite of all he can do if he has been getting into mischief.

Ever since he had spied on Chatterer the Red Squirrel to find out where Chatterer's new house was that small voice had given Peter no rest at all.

"The sooner it's over the better," thought Peter as he ate a hasty breakfast. Then he started as fast as he could go, lipperty, lipperty, lip, for the old stone wall on the edge of the Old Orchard where Chatterer had found a new home. As he drew near he heard voices. Peter stopped to listen. While it isn't at all polite or nice to listen to what other people are saying when they don't know that you are around it is very, very necessary for the little people of the Green Forest and Green Meadows to know who is about, so whenever they hear voices they always stop to listen and make sure who the voices belong to. So Peter stopped and listened.

"Guess I'll hurry and find out what it is so I can laugh, too," thought Peter.

They were the voices of Chatterer and Tommy Tit the Chickadee. Peter smiled and hurried on. There was nothing to be feared from either, and he wanted to get his unpleasant errand finished. As he drew nearer he heard Chatterer laughing fit to kill himself.

"Ha, ha, ha! Ho, ho, ho!" shouted Chatterer.

"He, he, dee, dee, dee!" laughed Tommy Tit.

"Must be a great joke; guess I'll hurry and find out what it is, so I can laugh, too," thought Peter, but just that very minute he heard something that made him stop short. It was his own name.

"And doesn't Peter know now?" asked Tommy Tit between chuckles.

"No," replied Chatterer, wiping tears of laughter from his eyes, "he hasn't any more idea where my new house is than the man in the moon. He thinks he knows, but bless his heart he hasn't any more idea than you have where it is."

"But I have more than an idea—I know where it is," replied Tommy Tit.

Chatterer stopped laughing. "What's that?" he cried sharply.

"I said that I know," replied Tommy Tit, and laughed harder than ever. "Dee, dee, dee! You can't fool me, Chatterer! I'm not Peter Rabbit and you can't fool me! Dee, dee, dee, chickadee!"

"How do you know?" demanded Chatterer.

"Because I peeped in and saw you in bed before you were awake this morning," replied Tommy Tit. "Of course, I wouldn't have peeped in if I had known that you had decided to make your home there, and now that I do know I won't be so impolite again."

Chatterer edged a little nearer to Tommy. "Say," he begged, "promise me that you won't give my secret away. Be a good fellow and promise not to tell any one where my new house is."

"Of course I'll promise," replied Tommy promptly. "I never meddle in other people's affairs." With that and a farewell "dee, dee," Tommy flew over to the middle of the Old Orchard.

Peter Rabbit sat right where he was. He had come up there to try to do the right thing, and now he didn't know just what to do.

Relapse Coming

Young man in hospital—Nurse, I've fallen in love with you. If I get well I'll have to leave, so I don't want to get well.

Fall Chicks Boost Family Meat Supply.

An extra brood of chicks bought last fall has provided a good supply of meat for Mrs. T. F. Hawkins of Mercer county and her family of five. In November, Mrs. Hawkins bought 200 chicks. She sold 40 of them at fryer size, but the remainder she fried, baked or stewed. Besides providing good eating, this is the kind of plan that helps in the national meat emergency. Mrs. Hawkins has 380 chicks in the brooder now, but hopes to raise more than that number. She will have a truck garden of one and a half acres too, just as she did last year when she canned more than 900 quarts of fruits and vegetables. A new enterprise is the growing of 500 raspberry bushes which she has just set out. With all her production activities, Mrs. Hawkins finds time to be reading chairman of her homemakers' club.

Frank Kadlac of Harlan county realized $58 above feed costs on a flock of 117 hens during March.

CONTROL CAN DO WHAT PROHIBITION CAN'T!

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"Quite a discussion some of the boys were having down at lodge meeting last night, Judge...you know, in the anteroom before the election of officers."

"Sure was...and Herb was dead wrong. The alcoholic beverage industry does account for more taxes than any other industry. I checked the figures in my office this morning. Why the figure on alcoholic beverages is pretty close to a billion and a half dollars a year. Lucky thing we haven't got prohibition or the government would have to make up the money some other way. And there's only one answer to that—more taxes. You know what that would add up to?... about $25 more taxes a year for every man and woman in the country. In other words you and Sue would have to pay about $50 more in some form of tax. I guess about the only ones who'd come out ahead on that deal would be the bootleggers and gangsters."

Tobacco Fertilizer Recommended

A ton of tobacco per acre has been set up as a goal by leaders in several Boone County Agricultural Improvement Programs for 1943 acording to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. A great many farmers reached this goal the past year.

The tobacco field fertilizer program recommended and being followed by many of these leading growers is as follows:

1. Seven to fifteen tons of manure per acre turned under.

2. Thirty to fifty pounds of 20% phosphate per ton of manure or its aquivalent broadcast after the field is plowed.

3. 275 to 375 pounds or more of of a high grade complete fertilizer per acre in the row.

Potash deficiency or the usual burning of the leaf tips in many fields has been noticed on many farms not fertilized in recent years. Manure and the complete fertilizer will take care of this deficiency. Tobacco needs an abundance of plant food in a short time. The recommended fertilizer treatment above should take care of this need.

Former Gallatin County Citizen Passes Away in Oklahoma City.

Dr. James H. Crouch, son of the late Evalyn and Neah Crouch passed away in Wesley Hospital, May 6the at Oklahoma City.

He was born near Warsaw, Ky., Sept. 21, 1855 and was in his 88th year. He grew to young manhood on his fathers farm, but graduated from Ohio Medical College in 1878 after reading medicine in the office of Dr. Lindsay, Springfield, Ill.

After his marriage in May 1881 to Bertha Ellen Merriman of Farmington, Ill., he located in Springfield where he practiced his profession. Forty years ago he went to Oklahoma City and was a well known physician of his new State, practicing until four years ago, when he went to Norman to make his home with his oldest daughter, Reva Doolin, a teacher of that city.

He was alert, hal al his facilities about him but diagnosed his own case as a worn out heart in a fairly good body. He had a fine personality and that with kindness to all his patients endeared him to all he came in contact, even in his last years of practice he let nothing stand in the way to relieve suffering humanity.

He is survived by one son, G. M. Crouch, Indianopolis, also three daughters, Mrs. J. W. Riley of Chicago, Mrs. J. B. Look of Pittsburg, Penn., Mrs. Reva C. Doolin, 939 S. Lahoma at Norman, Okla.; ten grandchildren and one great grandchild; two brothers, Jacob Crouch of Indianapolis, and W. P. Crouch of Glencoe, Ky.

A private funeral was held Friday evening, at 7 P. M. and the body sent to Dallas, Texas for cremation.

In his last illness he had the care of a loving wife and daughter. Everything was done to make his going easier and he passed on to the unknown land with a wave of his hand, tho he could not speak. He will be remembered by numbers in Oklahoma who he did much for.

Meeting Called at Louisville to Discuss School Teachers Situation.

Georgia M. Rouse, President of the Northern Kentucky Education Association, was in Louisville Thursday to attend a meeting of the Presidents and Vice-Presidents of the eleven educational associations of the state.

This meeting was called by the State Department of Education to discuss some plans and methods to relieve the alarming situation of the schools of the state. The salaries of the teachers have been so low for the state that there are more and more teachers leaving the profession and a number of the schools will not be able to open this next year if Federal and State aid is not obtained.

Kentuckians Honored At Puerto Rico

AATF HQ, Puerto Rico, May—Kentucky's colonels, corporals, caverns and corn were lauded in song and story on the Antilles Air Task Force's "48--Gun Salute" radio program broadcast from Puerto Rico.

The program was one in a weekly series which draws its name from the military custom of firing one salute for each state in the union on Independence Day.

With Air Corps soldiers presenting skits about historical facts, scenic spots and colorful events, men from the Bluegrass state were given a panoramic picture of their home state.

An imaginary excursion took the radio audience to the famous Wilderness Trail and Pilot Knob of Daniel Boone fame; into the Cumberlands and through the Harlan coal mines and into Pineville and Barbourville.

Skits were presented on the Derby, the conversion of a large part of Kentucky's forty-two million gallon liquor production to a nitro glycerine base for the war effort as well as the fact that the state subscribers to more war bonds and has more volunteers in the armed forces than any other state.

Also featured on the program were the famous homes of Henry Clay at Ashland; Fairview, where Jefferson Davis spent his boyhood; the log cabin at Hodgenville, where Lincoln was born; and the Old Kentucky Home at Bardstown where Stephen Foster received inspiration for his undying song. The Mammoth cave near Morgantown and the Echo river were also cited as well as the fact that the Lexington Herald has never had to print a free edition to maintain a boast that a Kentucky-bred horse wins a race every day.

Read during the broadcast was an Irvin S. Cobb narrative about his town of Paducah and other towns mentioned included Bowling Green, Elkton, Fort Knox and Louisville. Tribute was paid to the colleges, including the state university, Centre and Union.

Transcriptions of the broadcast will be sent to other army bases for rebroadcast.

H. D. A. Answers Cleaning Questions

Many are the questions asked by the farm Homemaker these days. A few are of general interest and Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent offers the answers that all may profit by them.

House Cleaning

1. Washing painted surfaces: Use a solution of equal parts vinegar, kerosone, and water. Begin at bottom and wash upward, carefully overlapping cleaned areas. This method will avoid drip streaks and the solution is easy on hands!

2. Removing grease spots from wall paper: Make a paste using any dry cleaning solution and talcum powder. Cover grease spot thoroughly and allow to dry over night—dust the powder from the spot. If the first application does not completely remove the grease repeat the method.

3. Dustless dust cloths: These must be prepared in open air away from buildings. Dissolve one tablespoon of linseed oil in one pint of gasoline (enough to process fifteen sizable cloths). Saturate dust cloths and squeeze out the solution. Hang on lines until gasoline has evaporated. Store carefully in covered glass or metal containers. Sufficient oil will remain after one washing for use again without retreating.

Care of Equipment

1. Refrigerators: Most neglected, yet most important point of attention is the condenser on the mechanical refrigerator. It is a grill-like part, usually located on the back or in bottom section of the box. To clean the condenser, turn off current and dust with upholstry attachment to the vacumn cleaner, feaher duster or whisk broom.

Care of Woolens

1. Protect from moths: Clean before storing. A brisk brushing along seams will help to dislodge moth eggs. Ironing also serves to destroy moth eggs. Paradicholorobenzene (P. D. P.) is the recommended protection from moths. This may be bought in crystaline form and put in open containers or cheesecloth bags in top of closets, trunks or garment bags. The gaseous fumes range downward to destroy moths. One pound is sufficient for 100 cubic feet. Use proportionate amounts.

The home of the late James Elmore, at Kensington was sold last week by T. W. Jones & C. W. Ransler, realtors of Covington, to Judge Franklin G. Krabiel of Dayton, Ohio. He expects to move here after remodeling the home.

Farmers Urged To Plant Grazing Crops

By planting annual grazing crops now, farmers can help avert the usual mid-summer slump in milk production, says C. L. Hempfling, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the Boone County Soil Conservation District.

The crops most generally planted are soybeans, Sudan grass, cowpeas, velvet beans, and pearl or cattail millet. Ample acreage of these crops used in conjunction with the permanent pasture will do much to improve summer grazing, the chairman stated.

He explained that when the average cow is turned on pasture in the spring, her milk flow increases. But by mid-summer, pastures have usually become exaustED and unable to supply sufficient grazing. Then milk production falls off.

By having such crops as soybeans, Sudan Grass, and so on, farmers can avoid the necessity of buying supplemental feed while the permanent pastures are not producing. Any excess growth can be made into hay for winter feeding or plowed under as green manure. A cover crop should be planted immediately after the crop is harvested or plowed under. Balbo rye appears to do better than any of the other small grain crops in Boone county. This crop too, when sown early will give some winter pasture and an excellant spring pasture.

In making seedings, especially where you use a drill or disk in the small grain, you should seed on the contour, to prevent the small gullying.

KENTON FARM SPRAY SUGGESTIONS

Have You Sprayed Your Grapes for the Home this Year?

It is too late for the Delayed dormant spray for grapes but there is still time to get the "Preblossom spray" and help you control black rot which causes the biggest loss in grapes each year.

Control Black Rot With Timely Sprays

Black rot in grapes can be controlled if sprays are applied in time according to recommendation of fruit specialists. Bordeaux mixture 8-10-100 is recommended for spraying grapes. Detailed information about its use and how to make up the Bordeaux mixture is given in Kentucky Extension Circular No. 209, Grapes for the Home. A copy can be obtained from your county extension agent or by writing to the College of Agricuiture, Extension Division, Lexington, Ky.

The Use of Spreader is Important

The circular points out that one should use a spreader with the spray material to get the best results. It is difficult to get good coverage and to get the spray material to stick unless a spreader is used to help make the Bordeaux spray material stick on the vine, leaves and fruit-berries. A number of spreaders are listed in the circular.

Insect Control

The control of leafhoppers, scale and other insects is explained in the Circular, as well as pruning and other information of value to the grape grower. Get a copy of the Circular and study it. Save and conserve your fruit supply. "Waste not, Want not".

Poultry Disease Destroys Chicks

Coccidiosis, sometimes called bloody diarrhea, has destroyed large numbers of young chickens in the country the past two weeks according to H. R. Forkner County Agent. While there are at least six kinds of coccidia only two kinds cause blood to appear in the droppings. The disease is most likely to attack birds between one and four months of age. The worst months for the disease are May, June and July.

The symptoms of the disease are paleness of beak, shanks and visible membrances, drowsiness and ruffled feathers, drooping wings and dirarrhea. The death rate may be high.

The cause is a very small parasite called coccidia. Whenever eaten by poultry these parasites live in the intestinal walls and multipiy rapidly. In a few days they develop into egg like forms and leave the intestines in the droppings. In the presence of air, warmth, and moisture they develop in 18 to 48 hours into the harmful stage and will cause cocidiosis if eaten by poultry.

The control is simple. There is no known medicine remedy. Moisture of any kind aids the development of the disease. The following points are effective in bringing the disease under control.

1. Confine the chicks to the brooder house and sun porch.
2. DRY CLEAN the brooder house each morning by scraping.
3. Keep feed and water containers clean.
4. If chicks appear cold, supply more heat.
5. Use milk instead of water or a flushing mash for five to ten days.

Clean ground is a great aid in the prevention.

The control of Coccidiosis will save Boone County poltrymen hundreds of dollars each year.

4-H Clubs To Have Spring Rally

Boone County 4-H Club members are planning their annual 4-H Club Spring Rally to be held at Burlington, Saturday, May 29 according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. All club members and leaders are urged to attend only where it does not greatly interfere with their war food production programs, food production for the duration, will receive first consideration by all members.

The morning program will be developed to discussions on 4-H Club work in the war effort. The afternoon program will include clothing demonstrations, home economics demonstration team contests and agricultural demonstration team contests on clean milk production, poultry culling, laying out hill side ditches and others.

The public is invited to attend and to take part in the Rally Day program.

Home Economics Contests

4-H Club girls will participate in Clothing Exhibit, Style dress Revue, Clothing Judging, Foods Judging and demonstrations, according to Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent. Local leaders will assist in putting on the contests.

AA girls who have clothing projects are being urged to exhibit their garments, and the Style dress Revue, which will be held about 3:00 P. M. will be the climax of this interesting activity.

Each organization will be represented in the clothing judging contest when girls, having two or more projects in clothing, try their hand at judging an exhibit made up of three classes. School dresses, undergarments, and costume plans. This contest will begin at 11:00 E. W. T.

Foods judging will be interesting for girls who have had one or more projects in foods. These girls will judge whole wheat biscuit, gingerbread and Victory menus. This contest will start the events, being scheduled at 10:00 E. W. T.

Parents and patrons of the 4-H Club members are cordially invited to attend.

A. M. Edwards, Jr. of Louisville spent the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Edwards and his sister, Mrs. Lula Huey and son Gaines Edward Huey of South Main St.

Allied Leaders Review Grand Strategy As Casablanca Promises Are Renewed Following Finale of Tunisia Campaign; Winter Wheat, Rye Dip to 1936 Levels

TUNISIA:
Steak and Potatoes

While captured German generals were putting down steaks, potatoes, and peaches in an American prison camp after they had surrendered with thousands of their troops, Allied forces sealed the fate of the remnants of the once proud Afrika Korps on rocky Cape Bon peninsula.

Blasted by swarms of Allied planes ruling the skies and an Allied fleet that stood off of Tunisia ready to crush any attempt at evacuation, the 80,000 Axis soldiers that retired to the skinny neck of land faced their doom, resisting to the last.

No less than six Axis generals, led by Maj.-Gen. Willibald Borowiecz, surrendered to Maj.-Gen. Omar N. Bradley, the infantry specialist who commanded the American Second army in its dramatic break through the rugged enemy positions before Bizerte.

The American forces continued to mop up around Bizerte where scattered hands of Nazis entrenched in the hills continued firing till their last round of ammunition. Much enemy material was recovered, since the German generals agreed to turn it over undamaged as one of the terms of surrender.

Also offering fierce resistance was a formidable Axis group holding out against the British Eighth army in the south. Cut off from the remnants of the northern Axis forces, this group stuck to the mountain fastnesses, while British artillery and infantry picked them slowly to pieces. Even the Nazis realized that their scattered forces were inexorably doomed.

FARM CROPS:
Light Prospects

Winter wheat and rye crops will be the smallest since 1936, the department of agriculture predicted early this month.

Production of winter wheat should approximate 515 million bushels, almost 200 million bushels less than last year, the department said. Yields per acre should average 15.5 bushels.

Thirty-six million bushels of rye should be harvested, over 20 million bushels less than 1942, the department reported. Each acre should yield 11.7 bushels.

Condition of tame hay was placed at 81 per cent of normal. Pastures were said to be 78 per cent of normal. Stocks of hay on farms early in the month totaled over 13 million tons, well over last year's.

PACIFIC:
Air Warfare

Striking back at Japanese bases northwest of Australia, Allied airmen destroyed or damaged 23 enemy planes in a heavy raid on Babo, Dutch New Guinea. Bombs also were dropped on oil tanks and docks, and flames visible for 80 miles licked the installations.

In China, heavy and medium bombers of the 14th American air force swooped down on the Japanese airdrome at Canton, razing hangars, fuel storage dumps, repair shops and factories. Accompanying fighters shot down 13 enemy planes, and Liberator tail gunners accounted for three others.

SOLDIER MAIL:
Now Can Get Packages

American soldiers serving overseas no longer need obtain permission from commanding officers to receive packages from home.

If Johnny Doughboy asks that a package be sent to him, it will be delivered without any further formality, save that the parcel must be of the current specified size and weight. The soldier's envelope must be presented when mailing the package.

GRAND STRATEGY:
FDR, Churchill Meet

No sooner had Axis resistance in Tunisia collapsed than Prime Minister Churchill of Great Britain was on his way to Washington to map the next step in the Allied grand strategy with President Roosevelt.

Although plans for an invasion of Europe loomed largest in the discussions, the situation in the Pacific also was given much consideration. Continued Japanese aerial assaults on Australia and the pressure the enemy was exerting on General Wavell's forces on the frontier in India, were said to be of concern to the conferees.

The two leaders re-emphasized their "unconditional surrender" decision of Casablanca.

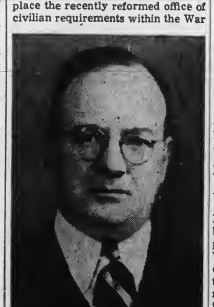
Official quarters predicted the formulation of a concrete plan of action at the meeting. They remembered that Churchill's visit here after Pearl Harbor resulted in the decision to concentrate on the defeat of Hitler first; Churchill's second conference with President Roosevelt in Washington in the summer of 1942 preceded the invasion of French North Africa, and the Casablanca meeting saw the development of plans for the battle of Tunisia.

Discussion of the Russian-Polish controversy, and policies to be framed with the occupation of Europe, also were said to have entered in the latest Churchill-Roosevelt meeting.

UNEMPLOYMENT:
900,000 Still With Us

Despite booming business, there were still 900,000 unemployed in the United States in April, the census bureau reported. Of the number, however, were many merely enjoying an interval from one job to another.

While non-agricultural payrolls dropped 400,000 in the month, agricultural employment jumped 600,000, thus showing a general increase of 200,000 over the month of March.



According to the census bureau, the boost in agricultural employment reflected the return of many industrial laborers to the farms, and the early working of school boys.

CIVILIAN SUPPLY:
Agency for Consumers

If the U. S. senate has its way, the supply of civilian goods in America will become the responsibility of a powerful new independent agency answerable only to Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes.

A bill introduced by Senator Maloney of Connecticut and passed by a 44 to 29 vote, provides for the creation of a civilian supply administration which would determine the essential needs of consumers and then place its orders for materials and manpower for the production of the goods. These orders would have the same high ranking as those of the army and navy.

The new administration would replace the recently reformed office of civilian requirements within the War

SENATOR F. T. MALONEY
Would determine civilian needs.

Production board. Arthur D. Whiteside was appointed to head the reorganized office after protests that the WPB had sidetracked civilian industry in its concentration on war production.

Opponents of Maloney's bill contended the WPB office should be given an opportunity to operate before another new governmental agency is created.

LOCAL BOARDS:
OPA Increases Power

Authority of local rationing boards was greatly increased through a new order issued by the Office of Price Administration. Boards now can revoke gas ration books if they find the bearer has misinformed them upon applying for the book, or if the operator of a commercial vehicle has violated a provision of the Office of Defense Transportation.

Ration books may also be revoked for speeding.

RUML PLAN:
Returned to Life

Buried more than a month ago, the Ruml plan has sprung back to life, and although it has slightly changed form, it is still recognizable in congress. The latest version of the Ruml plan would forgive all income taxes for one year, except those of persons excessively profiting from the war, and put the nation's taxpayers on a current basis.

According to the latest bill, a 20 per cent withholding tax after legal exemptions, would be imposed on all weekly wages or salaries, on either the 1942 or 1943 incomes, whichever are higher. The remaining year's taxes would be wiped out.

To guard against persons profiting from excessive profits from the war effort, regular normal and surtax rates would be applied against all income over the person's ordinary income for 1938, '39 or '40, plus a $10,000 exemption.

Provisions for special payments by farmers and professional people are included, indications being that farmers would pay all but the last installment this year, and then make a final settlement on March 15 of 1944. The latest bill differs from the one recently passed by the house, in that the house bill would merely forgive taxes on the normal and first surtax rate.

FRANCO:
'No One Can Win'

Appealing to "the conscience of peoples," Spanish Chief of State Francisco Franco again called upon the warring powers to come to peace.

Asserting that the present conflict had reached a deadlock, Franco said that neither side now has the power to destroy the other.

"The world has now undergone three years of war and when this time is passed it is fitting to think of peace, of ending hates and of bringing peoples together," Franco stated.

Again claiming that Spain has preserved her neutrality to be available to the warring powers as a mediator in negotiations, Franco declared: "Abroad, Spain demands a post which corresponds to her history in service, humanity and worth."

To Franco's plea, Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden of Britain replied: "Our terms are unconditional surrender."

INVASION:
To Hit Underbelly?

Prime Minister Churchill's twangy reference some months ago to the Mediterranean shoreline as the "underbelly of Europe" was ill received in the Axis capitals. It was much better, Axis officials said, to refer to the territory as the "abdomen."

But "underbelly" or "abdomen," they both look alike to approximately a million Allied troops, facing Europe's southern boundary from one end of North Africa to the other. The big question on everyone's mind was: When will the United Nations swing the knockout punch at the enemy's midriff?

To counter the expected blow, the Nazis were feverishly completing coastal defenses in southern France. Whisked from North Africa, Marshal Rommel was reported inspecting fortifications in Greece, where the Germans have worked out an elaborate outer ring on the many Aegean islands leading to the mainland. Bulgaria was said to be putting the finishing touches on defenses facing neutral Turkey.

Matching the large Allied forces in North Africa are well over two million troops in England, poised for a thrust at any point, or series of points, along the whole occupied European mainland from Norway to southern France. When the invasion comes, several landings undoubtedly will be made, to spread the Nazi defense forces.

SUPREME COURT:
Free Air

In a decision read by Justice Felix Frankfurter, the Supreme court broke the grip big radio chains reputedly held over smaller stations. Whereas it was alleged the chains could compel affiliates to carry certain programs, and deny them the right to present others through contract terms, the Supreme court verdict now allows the smaller stations a free choice.

The Supreme court ruled that the Federal Communications commission's order of 1941 providing that no licenses shall be granted to stations or applicants having specified relationships with networks was within the law.

The two big chains contesting the FCC's order argued that the agency lacked the authority to formulate such a regulation. However, the 5 to 2 majority, speaking through Justice Frankfurter, declared:

"The act gave the (FCC) not niggardly but expansive powers . . ."

MISCELLANY:

CUT LINES: As an indication of the tenseness that has gripped southeastern Europe in the expectation of an Allied invasion, telephone communications have been cut between Axis Bulgaria and neutral Turkey.

TOO COMPLACENT: Rookies entering the army are too complacent and think the war is boy scout stuff, Maj. Gen. C. L. Scott at Fort Knox, Ky., has said.

AID TO RUSSIA

It is now permissible to reveal that several months ago about 300,000 tons of shipping were tied up in the Persian Gulf waiting to be unloaded.

This represented a super attempt to aid Russia, and although some ships were tied up for weeks, it was not the fault of the War Shipping administration or the army. This was an attempt to show good faith to Russia when she was under terrific siege, when the battle of Stalingrad was in the balance.

In some cases ships rode at anchor 50 and 60 days in the Gulf of Persia, waiting to unload, their crews idle.

Basic reason for this delay is that port facilities along the Gulf of Persia are backward if not medieval. There were no modern docks or cranes, and to unload locomotives without cranes is almost impossible. Also the railroad running north from Basra to the Caucasus is a meandering affair, never completely finished, originally built to reach the Shah's hunting lodge rather than port facilities on the Caspian.

Very little had been done by the British to improve this line, until American engineers got busy. Even before Pearl Harbor, when we first started sending aid to Russia, American railroad men were rushed to Basra. But it was a tough job, and was still unfinished last fall and summer. At that time the Nazis were knocking our Murmansk convoys off Norway into smithereens. So, to keep faith with Russia, ships were piled into the Gulf of Persia.

Today the situation, though still difficult, is greatly improved. In fact, hard-hitting Lew Douglas, dynamo of the War Shipping administration, has pepped up unloading facilities in India, South Africa and other bad bottlenecks where previously U. S. ships had to wait three and four weeks to unload.

WORRIED OVER RAILROADS

Certain Washington officials acquainted with railroad operation are worried about temporary breakdowns of the transportation system, and consequent serious delays in moving war materials.

While it is admitted that the railroads are doing a "grand job," there is no overlooking the fact that the burden is proving too heavy.

Most serious is the situation in westward freight traffic. The country's railroads were built with the idea of moving traffic eastward, with bigger facilities as traffic moves east. But today, with a Pacific war to supply, the westward movement is greater than ever.

Breakdowns have occurred on single-track western lines, requiring rerouting in a circuitous manner, with delays of days and weeks in some cases. A transcontinental freight movement which once was accomplished in five days is now requiring ten to fifteen.

The remedy seems to be an increase in the centralized control of traffic. This smells like government operation, from the railroads' point of view, and they shy away from it. But officials in ODT who have no railroad connections regard such control as necessary for the wartime job.

Note: The burden for meeting these problems falls on the shoulders of V. V. Boatner, director of the division of railroad transport in the ODT. Boatner has now shifted to a "without compensation" basis so he can act as consultant for the railroads and be paid by them, while still officially working for the government.

FARMER CHENNAULT

Freshman Rep. Charles E. McKenzie of Louisiana expected to get a first-hand report on the war in the Far East when he shook hands with his most distinguished constituent, Gen. Claire Chennault, leader of American forces in China, who is visiting in the United States.

But the "Fighting Tiger" almost floored McKenzie by inquiring: "How's farming down home? I can't wait to get back to my plantation."

McKenzie replied that he had just returned from Louisiana, that farmers in his district were doing "very well" considering the shortage of labor and machinery.

"Did you see my place in Concordia Parish?" asked Chennault anxiously.

"You bet, General," replied McKenzie, "and I can report that it is one of the most beautiful and best regulated plantations in Louisiana. I'd like to live there myself, on the banks of Lake St. John."

Note: While Chennault is at war, his Louisiana farm is being managed by his wife and children.

Air Corps Cuts Red Tape With Absorption of CAP

Student Pilots of Civil Air Patrol Are Vital Link in Nation's Defense Chain; Valued Services Now Recognized.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

As the tempo of American activity on the foreign fronts moves with an accelerated beat, it is pleasing to note that a lot of red tape in Washington is being rolled up and chucked into official wastebaskets. One example is what the air corps is trying to do to utilize every ounce of human and material resource that is available.

When war comes, there is always a sharp cross current of human emotions—the good old one of self-preservation, and the equally old and much better one, from the standpoint of the nation, of patriotism. And, for opposite reasons hut with the same result, both meet with obstacles. Many injustices occur in the selection of men for military service. Many ardent and valuable men are stopped from rendering the service of which they are capable and which they are anxious to furnish.

Red tape is the answer. But red tape is bound to tangle any herculean effort when a peaceful nation turns into a belligerent.

Drab Duties

The latest step in removing the red tape that was holding back a lot of valuable human power was the absorption of the Civil Air Patrol by the air corps. As this is written, the decision is being made as to which administrative group will take over this body of patriotic fliers who have been furnishing their own planes and their own services, unsung and unhonored. Most of their duties have been drab, and in many cases, stultifying because of their indefinite, quasi-military status. They are not a part of the air corps.

Another important step forward is also under way which will bring that group of unselfish young men into active service after months of morale-breaking waiting—I refer to the Civilian Pilot trainees, most of whom are now sure of active duty as instructors or flying cadets. They, too, have worked without compensation other than subsistence, and have sacrificed time, earning capacity and opportunity to continue their normal civilian careers. They are now being gradually absorbed into the air corps, too.

Few people in the country outside of the families of the members are familiar with either the Civil Air Patrol, the student pilots of the War Training program or even that other group of a million and a half volunteers who make up the aircraft warning service.

The Civil Air Patrol received some publicity for its important part in offshore duty in the campaign which stopped the submarine activities off the eastern coast of the United States. These men were pilots who owned their own planes, took their special training and received only gasoline and a small fee for depreciation while on active duty.

Spotters for 'Tough Guys'

They are a vital link in that chain of air and surface guardians who watched our waters from Maine to Florida. They could spot a sub, immediately report it to the nearest bomber or a fast coast guard or naval vessel. Some of the civilian planes were equipped with light bombs but they were not able to make much use of them because their planes were slow and a sub on the surface could spot them as quickly as they could spot the sub and crash dive. That can be done in seven or eight minutes and since visibility may extend 15 miles, the sub could hit bottom before the pilot could get over his target. Their chief function was to play bird-dog for the "tough guys" carrying heavier depth bombs.

Civil Air Patrol did invaluable but less romantic service in carrying vital machine parts between factories. It is now possible that some of these men and women in the interior of the country who have been making interesting overland flights from here to there may get a whiff of sea air, too. In any case, the red tape between them and the air command has been severed.

If not technically, at least practically, "they're in the army now."

As to the boys in the CPT war training program, who have been warming benches and waiting at nothing per diem, a bill in congress is about to give them pay as active reservists and as soon as there is equipment enough to accommodate all of them, those unqualified for cadet combat training will probably have jobs as instructors or transport pilots soon.

Status Unchanged

The last named group, the airplane spotters, operate under the Fighter Command, and their functions are such that their status will not be changed, they are a part of the Office of Civilian Defense.

This group is made up of volunteer workers working with armed force experts, in connection with a vast network of telephone and radio connections which lace our entire coastline, east, south and west.

They total a million and a half people and the OCD calls this work done by the volunteers, the most arduous and technical job trusted to civilians. It consists in spotting, reporting and recording all activity. Not a plane appears in the skies that is not checked and accounted for. If it can't be identified, blackouts are ordered until it is.

Most of the volunteers are women and many more are needed. The job is described as being both exciting and tough. The anti-aircraft centers where these people work are guarded by soldiers and no one gets in who doesn't work there or is on official business.

Here dozens of girls work on a gigantic table map of the area. They wear telephone headsets and mouthpieces like a regular telephone operator, listening to the information and moving little markers called "pips," representing planes, about the map with long wands.

These girls are the end of a series of operations which go like this:

The spotter out on top of some building or hilltop sees a plane. The message comes in in semi-code, "Bomber on bi high west 39 Posy." The girl puts the pip on the spot on the map corresponding to the spotter's report. The details of the size and description of plane are recorded on a marker on the pip. As the plane moves, it is reported by each spotter in succession and pushed along on the map. But until three spotters have made the same report, it is not considered correct—because geese look like planes sometimes.

Method of Operation

After the third report, a teller watching the board from a balcony above, reports it to the operations room, which may be in another city. This point is the nerve center and here again, the planes are plotted. Army men and Civil Aeronautics administration officials who are continuously receiving information as to every plane leaving the ground, check this information with the map below them. Every plane has to be accounted for. If not—they, you and I, if we live in that vicinity, know about it—the air raid warning is flashed. If the flier has left the ground without clearance or through some mistake hasn't identified himself, he is likely to see a big bomber after him or he might even have to duck anti-aircraft fire. That is how careful our anti-aircraft defense has to be.

About Nutrition

I received the following card from a listener in Miami, Fla.:

"Those who know will tell you that the introduction of synthetic vitamins into white bread is all the bunk or sales talk. Canada and Great Britain will not allow it. The Pure Food Act boys know it too. But just look it up and laugh. 'Suckers' are not born today, they are made by propaganda and high-powered advertising."

I called up the Food and Drug administration ("Pure Food Boys"), Commissioner Campbell said to me:

"So far as the nutritionists know, synthetic vitamins are just as effective as natural vitamins. This has been shown by extensive experimentation."

Before the order was given to enrich white flour with synthetic vitamins, lengthy testimony was taken by leading nutritionists—scientific men with no axes to grind.

My listener was undoubtedly sincere. He was sincerely undoubting of his misinformation.

I wonder who started it?

War Ration Book No. 3 which provides new stamps to replace those running out in existing books will be distributed through the mails to more than 120,000,000 individuals beginning late in June and ending July 21.

A man said to a waitress in a restaurant: "I'm going to have another cup of coffee." "Not here," said the girl. "We'll see," said the man, "bring me a cup of hot water." The waitress did, he opened a cigarette case, took out a little envelope, dumped its contents into the cup. There was his coffee, sugar and all . . . perfectly legal. But it does seem like a lot of trouble.

LIVESTOCK NOTES

The following timely livestock notes are important according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

SHEEP

Wool

It is important that the fleece be handled with care to demand its most value on the market. Use only paper twine and tie with the skin side out, keep all trash off the fleece, use regulation wool bags and keep tags, dead wool, bury and damaged wool seperate from the clear wools.

Parasites

Treat old sheep at shearing time for stomach worms. All old sheep should have a spring treatment with phenothiazine to control nodular worms. Use the Bluestone Black Leaf 40 treatment next time after the nodular worm treatment.

Lambs

The price ceiling program works against the advantages that light weight early lambs have had in previous years. Standardize feed and where necessary treat lambs to produce weights of eight-five or more pounds before selling. Corn alone is a satisfactory feed to give lambs on pasture.

Ewes

Shearing time is an ideal time to cure the flock. Mark the culls and sell them when the fleece has from one forth to one half inch growth.

Trim the feet so that ewes walk naturally and will not as likely contact foot rot.

Large ewes are usually the best ewes.

Hogs

Market hogs weighing from 250 pounds to 300 pounds.

Suckling pigs need a feed containing from 25 to 28% protein, weanling pigs from 20 to 22% protein, while heavy fattening hogs need only 11 to 12% protein feed.

Clean sleeping quarters help control mange and lice. For killing lice on hogs where they cannot be dipped apply crenklase oil on the hogs head, neck and back or they may be sprayed with lime-sulfur.

Cattle

Don't turn on grass too soon. Grass should be from three to four inches high. Don't use raw rock phosphate as a mineral. It is dangerous to the stock.

"Good-bye my son, God bless you"

Millions of such partings and heartaches . . . as the youthful and courageous American Spirit moves with young men like this to other shores to defend Liberty against the Dictator.

Our forefathers, too, fired with the American Spirit of Freedom, rebelled against the Dictator and the Tyrant. Under the government they established, the growth of our Nation has been the envy of the world. Here the ordinary man and his family enjoy comforts not known to Kings of other times.

Here—under the stimulation of Free Enterprise—science, research and invention give promise of greater achievement and richer blessings than have ever been dreamed of heretofore.

Here we can live as we choose subject only to reasonable rules which we ourselves make . . . here in America our precious sons, whether from humble cabins or wealthy homes, may be rewarded for superior merit or ability, and reach high places in government or industry.

It is for the preservation of our forefathers' government—for Liberty—for Freedom of Enterprise—for the American Spirit, that our sons now fight.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD

American railroads are a development of Free Enterprise and the American Spirit. They are privately owned and operated. They had an important part in welding the several States into a unified country, with a common language, high purpose and unmatched development. They are unsurpassed in their war effort.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad, "The Old Reliable," is proud of the part that its half-billion dollar investment and its 31,000 employees are now contributing to winning the war. When the war is over, its efforts will be renewed to serve the public acceptably and to advance the inevitable development of the South.

What Is "Home-Canned"?

Foods are "home-canned", says OPA, if—(1) they have been canned in a kitchen primarily used for the preparation of meals, or to demonstrate the preparation of meals; (2) they have been canned in a separate building or shed, which a farm home has equipped for canning purposes, provided that the owner has first obtained permission from his local ration board to use such facilities.

Farm Meat Regulations

New meat-rationing regulations provide that a farmer and his family may consume meat raised on any farm he owns or operates, and may transfer meat from one of his farms to another to provide food for members of the household, without giving up ration points, even if the meat is not slaughtered on his farm. However, if the farm owner does not live on a farm, he must give up ration points for any meat he consumes elsewhere. Under the orginal regulations, a farmer who brought his own cattle to a custom slaughtering plant had to surrender red point stamps for the meat, while, if he killed and dressed the animal himself, the meat was "ration-free". A farm or ranch employer who feeds his employees in a bunkhouse or dining hall may now use meat and other rationed food raised on his farm on the same basis as if the employees were fed in the household.

Sugar Allowed For Canning

Sugar for home canning will be limited to one pound for each four quarts (or eight pounds) of the finished product and may be secured on written application to the housewife's local board. Each person is allowed not more than 25 pounds. Any family can apply for sugar to put up jams, jellies, and preserves at the rate of five pounds per person. Last year, sugar for preserves was limited to one pound per person.

Ceilings Set On Market Basket Foods

Maximum prices now being established by OPA for the market areas of about 130 cities are expected to cover 80 per cent of the food in the family market basket by June1. These maximums will be top prices in each principal city and its "market area", which the district offices of the OPA have defined. By June, the OPA expects to complete prices for the first 160 cities and then undertake the same job for other localities. Community-wide top prices are intended to simplify regulations for the storekeeper and the housewife and to make the consumer a partner in the enforcement of wartime price ceiling.

Less Points For "Farm Butter"

Some grades of "farm butter" may be reduced in point value to prevent waste or spoilage, as a result of an amendment to the meats-fats rationing regulations of OPA. "Farm butter" or "country buter" usually is produced in small quantities by farmers and sold locally. Since it is not of uniform quality, it is considerably more perishable than commercially produced butter. The amendment empowers the OPA regional directors, when authorized by the Washington office, to deal with local emergency cases.

Overseas Parcel Post

Packages may now be mailed to a soldier overseas if a request is received from the soldier and the envelope bearing the APO cancellation mark is presented at the time of mailing. Formerly, the approval of the commanding officer was required. Current restrictions as to weight and size of packages remain in effect.

Fight Potato Black Market

OPA investigators are being sent into major shipping centers of the early crop of white potatoes, and into approximately 30 of the country's pincipal terminal market areas in an effort to prevent black market practices. Maximum prices for country shippers of early crop potatoes in the south and southwest range from $2.40 to $2.50 a hundredweight, except for Florida where the maximum is $3.10. Some arrests have already been made.

Farm Machinery Rationing

At their discretion, state war boards can now cancel county quotas on any or all types of farm machinery according to revised farm mahinery rationing order issued by the War Food Administration. If a state board exercises this authority, farmers will be required ti locate the machinery they want to buy before they are given a purchase certificate. Furthermore, county farm rationing committees may set the expiration date of purchase certificates any time bewеen 10 and 60 days after issuance, or may cancel the certificate after the holder has had a reasonable time to buy the specified machinery.

Gas For Furloughs

Members of the armed forces on leave or furlough for three days or more may get a special gasoline ration (up to five gallons) for personal errans when other means of transportation are not available. The ration is obtained by presenting pass, leave, or furlough papers to a rationing board.

Under Soviet law, any citizen who refuses work to a woman simply because she is a woman, is liable to punishment.

Chevrolet Adds Magnesium Operation

Production pouring of magnesium castings in a division of the Chevrolet Grey Iron Foundry in Michigan is now an accomplished fact, adding a considerable new output of these vital aircraft engine parts to America's war production program. Shown above pouring this highly volatile new metal are workmen in the Chevrolet plant.

KENTON COUNTY FARM NEWS

Recommends Dust for Lousy Cattle

When cattle rub off big spots of hair at this season it is usually the sign of lice. The Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station recommends dusting with a mixture of two parts of sodium fluosilicate, one part of phenothiazine and one part of white flour. Apply one to two ounces evenly all over the body, rubbing into the hairy parts of the animal, including the tail. Two or three treatments may be necessary. They should be applied at two-week intervals.

Long Service May Mean Bitter Milk

Milking cows too many months, rather than strongly flavored weeds or feeds, is usually to blame for "off" flavors in milk, cream and butter, says the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, in reply to complaints.

Such long-milked cows may even develop a small amount of soap in their milk, with causes the cream to be foamy and difficult to churn.

The "off" flavor in milk or cream may be corrected by heating in a double boiler to 170 degrees for a minute or 145 degrees for 30 minutes.

The real solution, says the Experiment Station, is to dry off the cow, and then feed her well during her dry period. She probably will be all right after the next calf arrives.

Salt Will Cure Feather-Picking

Larger feeding space and the use of salt are cures for cannibalism or feather-picking among chicks, says Prof. W. M. Insko, Jr., of the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics. In most cases, lack of feeding space causes t e chick to begin to pick at one another, he says. Therefore the first tihng to do is to provide longer troughts so the chicks won't be crowded.

The salt cure consists of putting salt at the rate of one pound to 100 pounds of mash before the chicks, letting them have no other feed for two days only; or putting a tablespoon of salt in a gallon of water for the birds to drink for one day only.

Prof. Insko lists the causes of feather-picking as: 1. Overcrowding in the brooder. 2. Lack of feeding space. 3. Too much light in the brooder. 4. Overheating.

American war expenditures for the first quarter of 1943 were about a billion dollars more than for the entire war year 1918.

BACK TO THIS?

..not if you take good care of your

Electric Range

Back to soot-scouring, an overheated kitchen and all of the other disadvantages of old-fashioned flame-type cooking? Not if you take proper care of your electric range! An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, so give your range the attention it deserves and it will serve you well for the duration!

POINTERS ON RANGE CARE

- Clean outside of range as you would a china plate. Wash, when cool, with warm soapy water; rinse and wipe dry. Never put cold water or cold objects on hot porcelain. It may crack or craze the finish.
- Avoid letting spilled foods harden on range. Food spilled on surface units should be allowed to burn off. Do not use stiff brush or sharp instrument.
- Scour pans under surface units daily to prevent burning-in of spillovers.
- Don't let utensils burn dry on surface units. The metal will melt and run into the coil and ruin it.
- To clean oven, wait until it cools, then remove units by pulling them straight out. Wash oven linings with warm soap and water, scouring charred spots with steel wool or thick mixture of powdered chalk and household ammonia.
- Never wash oven or surface units. Keep dripping rags away from units. Water may damage connections.
- Get oven units back securely after removing them for cleaning. If they are barely in receptacle, they may heat up, yet the electricity may be "arcing" and burning out the terminals.
- Scour aluminum deep well cookers with steel wool and soap and water. Do not allow water to drip into the cooker unit.
- Do not heat porcelain enamel cookers before putting in fat, water or foods and do not allow to boil dry or subject to sudden changes in temperatures.
- Don't put an insulated cooker top in water or it will seep into insulation and warp cover.
- Have a serviceman check your range occasionally to see that it is "sitting level," units are operating satisfactorily and that wiring is in tip-top shape.

Kidneys Must Work Well
For You To Feel Well

24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.

Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. Lieut. Kelly, sent to the tunnel hospital on Corregidor, learned from the wounded there how badly the war was going for us. Cavite, our big naval base, was gone and our air force nearly wiped out. While he was there the hospital was bombed. Ensign Akers is telling some of his experiences before Manila fell.

CHAPTER V

"Twelve hours before the Japs entered the town I was sent back into Manila to pick up the remnants. I had just eighty gallons of gas to go those thirty miles—finally got back with ten. A curious thing happened during those closing hours; nobody had given orders to blow up the oil reserves. Maybe some of them belonged to private companies; it would go against a business man's grain to blow up good oil. Finally a little junior-grade naval lieutenant noticed it. He had no authority, but he gave orders he had no right to give, and presently the oil was blazing. I hear he got a Navy Cross for doing it.

"I was in Manila about that time," said Cox. "A big air attack was going on, although it had already been declared an open city. For that reason I had gone in with the guns on my boat with their canvas covers on—for welfare reasons. Yet, open city or not, the big air raid was on—streets deserted except for a few people running nowhere in particular like crazy, planes crisscrossing the sky above. The big church, about a mile from shore, was just beginning to burn. In the harbor, boats were burning and sinking on all sides—five and ten-thousand tonners. But not a single shot was fired at the planes—which came down as low as five hundred feet.

"I went up on into the city, and everywhere people were kind and helpful. The Japs were right outside the town, and yet the storekeepers would give me anything we Americans needed without either money or a voucher—just sign a paper, that was all. They trusted us."

"I took my boat into the harbor just as the Japs were entering the city," said Bulkeley. "It was night, and we could see the town burning—a huge death-pall of smoke hanging above and oil six inches deep over the water. It looked like doom hanging over a great city, and it was. Made you feel bad. We stayed out there from nine o'clock at night until about three in the morning. Didn't dare go ashore, and anyway our job was to destroy harbor shipping—so what was left of it wouldn't fall into Jap hands."

"I had to leave all my spare uniforms in my locker there, damn them," said Akers. "I hope none of them fit."

"Watching them take over made you feel pretty sick," said Bulkeley. "We finished up and started home, to get back before dawn, now and then looking back at the fires over the water. Every time it made us sore."

"It was a tough New Year's Eve for me, too," said Kelly, "because we knew more or less what was going on. Then there was another reason. Some of the army officers were throwing a little New Year's party with the nurses that night, and since this medical officer Peggy had been going with was just back from Bataan, of course I knew where she'd be.

"Along in the evening after sunset I walked out to the mouth of the tunnel and sat down, to watch the twilight of the old year die away. It had been a tough year, but the one ahead looked worse. And here was I, useless for the war, in an army hospital. From away off I could hear them playing the portable at the officers' party, and I remembered how cute Peggy had looked in her civilian dress when she danced, and that didn't help any. Pretty soon one of the other nurses I knew, Charlotte, came out and sat down near me. She wasn't at the party because she had to go on duty soon, but that didn't matter, because her boy friend had just been wounded three days before, and she was worried sick about him.

"Just then I noticed someone sitting down on the other side of me—I turned and, by George, it was Peggy. Not in uniform, either. She was wearing that cute cool-looking cotton-print civilian dress.

"I couldn't figure it. 'Didn't you like the party?' I asked. 'Wasn't it any good?'

" 'I don't know,' she said. 'I didn't go to the party.'

" 'Weren't you asked?'

" 'Yes,' she said. 'I was asked. But it was New Year's, you see, and I thought it might be nice here.'

"Not very many nice things happen to you during a war, but this was about the nicest that ever happened to me then, or any other time. It made me feel so good that between the two of us, we managed to get Charlotte cheered up. She had to go back on duty presently, and she managed to sneak us out a couple of fairly cold bottles of Pabst beer, to celebrate on. But Peggy had been preparing. The island was on two meals a day, but she'd managed to hold back a couple of apples and a whole box of marshmallows. That was our New Year's Eve supper, and I'll bet that yours, wherever you had it, couldn't have tasted any better.

"Running any kind of romance, no matter how mild, was a real problem on Corregidor. About the best place to sit was right down where we were, at the tunnel's mouth. But the road ran right in front of it, and every five minutes an army truck would barge tactlessly around the curve, shining its dimmed-down headlights right on you. Then for another three minutes you were choking with dust. If you got tired of this and tried to go for a walk, you'd hardly get started when you would realize that eleven thousand men were trying to sleep all over that little island, and if you went far, you would step on most of them in the dark, and not many of them would thank you for it. There wasn't an unoccupied square foot anywhere.

"We proved that later on when the doctor prescribed walks for me—to build back my strength, because I'd lost thirty pounds—and Peggy was assigned to go along. The troops swarmed on that island—every pond was crowded with them bathing, and I would always have to go ahead to take a look over hilltops and be sure Peggy wouldn't surprise them.

"Yet, open city or not, the big air raid was on."

"Meanwhile Bulkeley was reporting to the Admiral daily and was formulating a plan—which he would talk over with me, as I was his second officer—for what we would do when our gas ran out. We had damned little left, and the army couldn't spare us any.

"Our first plan was, when we got down to our minimum, to get out to Australia. The navy patrol bombers had planted caches of gasoline among the islands like steppingstones, and the Admiral gave us their location. But the first steppingstone was Singapore, and the Japs were working their way down the peninsula, closer and closer to it. Could we get there first? Of course we wouldn't leave the Philippines until all of our torpedoes were gone and we had just enough gas left to make the final run. But then, as you know, Singapore fell and also the southern islands—Celebes and Zamboanga. The route with the cached gas was closed—that plan was out.

"So then we said, who wanted to go to Australia anyway? Our job was to defend Manila Bay—wasn't that our part in the war plan? Yet even then it kept coming up: suppose the worst came to the worst and Luzon folded up—the whole archipelago—even Java—what then?

"Then Bulkeley here hit on a real plan. When our gas was down to just what we could carry on our decks, instead of waiting around to get captured by the Japs, we'd take our boats to China to continue the war. At first glance you'd say that was crazy—the Japanese holding most of the Chinese coast—but not the way the skipper had it thought out. He knew China from the years he'd spent out there on a gunboat while I was there on a destroyer.

"The Japs were closing in on Hong Kong—that was fine for us! We'd make our dash—shoot our last few remaining fish at their gathered transports just where they least expected an attack, and then head north toward the region of Swatow.

"Of course the Japs held that coast too, but Bulkeley had worked out an answer, all in the utmost secrecy. He'd gotten in touch with Colonel Wong, the Chinese military observer. Wong had cabled Chungking to investigate the vicinity. Chungking cabled back that it could be done.

"They said the Japs held the Swatow region thinly—at no point did they go more than ten miles inland. So, at an agreed time, and at an agreed rendezvous on the coast, Chungking would send a raiding party down to fight its way to the beach and meet us.

"There we would burn our boats—now useless with all torpedoes expended against Jap targets. The Chinese couldn't hold that point long—but long enough to hustle us through that ten-mile Jap-held strip onto free Chinese soil. There trucks would take us to the nearest airfield, we would fly to Chungking, and from there a four-motored American ferry-command plane would bring us back to the United States.

"Where was the flaw? We couldn't see one, unless somehow it leaked out. Besides myself, only four living people knew. They were De-Long of our squadron, Captain Ray, chief of staff, Colonel Wong, and of course the skipper here, who had worked out every detail.

"But before we left we knew there would be plenty of action ahead for us here, and I told Bulkeley I was crazy to get out of this hospital, and asked for his help. If they'd let me get back to duty, I'd agree to anything—promise to soak my hand for so many hours a day—anything they said, just to get back even on a semiduty status.

"So we staged it for the next morning, when the ward doctor would be dressing my hand at about the same time the head surgeon made his rounds. We tackled him. I made my talk, and he seemed to waver. 'Tell this bird you need me,' I said to the skipper. 'We really do,' said Bulkeley, but just then Peggy overheard and queered the whole thing. 'Certainly not!' she said. 'You can't let him go back to duty with his hand wide-open!' That swung him back. 'Duty!' he growled. 'Who said anything about duty? Two weeks of it and you'd lose your whole arm.'

"I tried to argue—point out that if the MTB's went out on a mission, I could hold on with one arm as well as two, but Peggy had done it, and now he wouldn't listen.

" 'One of these days you're going to find an empty bunk,' I said. I was gloomy all that next week, but Peggy said I was a fool. That there were plenty of well, fit men to do my job. And that if I hadn't been so damned stubborn in the first place, and had got that hand treated in time, I'd never have come to the hospital, and never met her, and she would never have been able to break up my plan to get out, so it was all my fault!

"She's always had that cute way of seeming to storm at you and dress you down, so that you ended up by grinning and couldn't stay mad at anything long.

"So it went along for another week, she leading me out for walks every day to get some of those thirty pounds back, and then one day we returned to find that Bulkeley had been by looking for me—said he was going out on a raid that night, up to Subic Bay looking for a Jap cruiser, that he'd waited hoping to take me, but finally had to leave.

"It set me almost crazy. If I hadn't been out on that damned health tour with a pretty girl, I wouldn't have missed the raid! So here I was while my gang was up there tangling with a cruiser, maybe getting killed, because the Japs had Subic Bay so thick with guns that it was almost suicide to go in.

"All that night there was no news. I was up at 5:30—'Any dope from the torpedo boats?'—still nothing. But at seven they said, yes, Bulkeley had come back, managed to sink a cruiser and get away, but the other boat was missing—probably lost."

"It was a job we did for the Army," explained Lieutenant Bulkeley (describing the historic attack of his P. T. Boat in Subic Bay mentioned.) "A couple of Jap ships, one of them an Imperial Navy auxiliary cruiser with 6-inch guns had been shelling our 155-millimeter emplacements on Bataan—blasting them with heavy stuff. The major in charge had been wondering how to get rid of them and had phoned Admiral Rockwell, who gave us permission to tackle the job. We knew they were based in Subic Bay, probably in Port Binanga. Subic is on the west coast of Luzon, just north of Bataan. I decided to send two boats—the 31 boat, which was Lieutenant DeLong's, and the 34 boat, which was Kelly's, now commanded by Ensign Chandler. I went along in it for the hell of it.

"We tested everything—tuned the motors, greased torpedoes, and got under way at nine o'clock, chugging north along the west coast of Bataan. It was very rough. We throttled down to thirty knots, and even then we were shipping water, but we got off the entrance to Subic Bay about half an hour after midnight. Here, according to plan, the two boats separated. DeLong in the 31 boat was to sweep one side of Subic Bay and I the other. We were to meet at Port Binanga, at the end. If something happened and we didn't meet there, then we were to rendezvous at dawn just outside the mine fields of Corregidor.

LESSON TEXT—Proverbs 20:1; 23:29-35; Matthew 24:45-51.
GOLDEN TEXT—At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.—Proverbs 23:32.

Deceitful is a good word to describe both the product and the propaganda of the liquor business. Alcoholic beverages are in themselves most deceitful, and the methods by which they are sold to the public certainly cannot commend themselves to right thinking people.

Intoxicants are associated with social preferment, festive occasions, radiant beauty, when they ought to be connected with the bleary eye, the babbling tongue, the ragged children and brokenhearted mothers. What about the men who have lost their positions and their characters, and the women who have paid with their virtue for their love of intoxicants? Why not picture them in the beautiful magazine advertisements?

I. Wine Is a Deceiver (Prov. 20:1).

Wine is personified here as an evil demon who leads men on in the hope of some pleasure or advantage, and then lets him down to the depths of destruction. It makes him think he is great and powerful, when he is only weak and degraded. It excites him to foolishness and wild boisterousness, when he would normally be sensible, quiet and orderly.

He who thought he was wise in partaking of its stimulation, finds himself deceived, and to his regret he realizes that he is a fool in the hands of a malicious deceiver.

II. Wine Is a Depraver (Prof. 23: 29-35).

Depravity is a word not used as much as it was a generation ago, but it well describes the condition to which the drunkard comes in due time. And it is wine and other liquor which has depraved or corrupted him. A number of things appear in the text.

1. Liquor Destroys (vv. 29, 30). This is true morally, mentally, physically, and spiritually. Red eyes, wounds, complaining—these are only the outward signs of inward physical destruction of alcohol. Woe and sorrow speak of mental and social distress. The moral and spiritual destruction follow.

2. Liquor Deludes (vv. 31, 32). Its color, its sparkle and effervescence, its smooth appearance—all excite the anticipation of goodness and pleasure. And what does the drinker receive? The bite of the serpent and the sting of the adder. How true!

3. Liquor Demoralizes (v. 33). Alcohol is the handmaiden of immorality. "Strange women" come into the picture very quickly. They and the drinker soon find that drink sets them free from the limitations of decency and good sense, and the result is beyond description.

Those who defend liquor, or temporize with this problem, may as well recognize that they are encouraging the moral destruction of our boys and girls. It is a terrifying responsibility!

4. Liquor Dulls Man's Senses and Dazes Man's Mind (vv. 34, 35). Only a fool would lie down to sleep in the midst of the sea, or on top of the mast of a ship, or in the gutter, or against a lamp post. That's what drink does for a man.

His perceptions become so dull that he can be beaten, and he does not know he has been hurt. Exposed to inclement weather, he knows not enough to seek shelter. His money is lost or given away without concern on his part.

And when he sobers up—what then? His faculties are so dazed that he can think of only one thing to do, and that is to seek more wine. What is it that Scripture says about the dog and the fool? (See Prov. 26:11).

III. Wine Is a Destroyer (Matt. 24:45-51).

We have already touched on that point in its personal application, but now we see it in its bearing on his occupation and standing in the community.

The contrast is between the good servant who recognizes that his one and constant obligation is to serve, whether his master is present or absent, and the evil servant who violates his trust.

Notice that his first thought after cruelty to his fellow servants is to satisfy his appetite "to drink with the drunken."

Cruelty, mismanagement, unfaithfulness are tied up without question with drinking. Is it not so today? If you doubt it, read your daily newspaper. Why tride with anything which keeps such evil company? You may find yourself mixed up with them beyond your ability to get free.

The final result is the loss of his position and of his life. Who will deny that this aptly states the end of the drunkard's way. But someone says: "I do not intend to be a drunkard. I only take a social drink." That is the way the drunkard started. Why begin to travel that road?

Famous Physician Was Gracious With Encore!

The wealthy man had cracked a rib, and a slight operation was necessary. He engaged a famous specialist.

Local doctors were excited at the prospect of a visit from a big noise, and their request for permission to watch the operation was granted.

When the patient came out of the anesthetic he found himself smothered in bandages. He summoned the nurse.

"What's all this?" he demanded.

"Well, sir, it was such a beautiful operation, and the applause was so tremendous that Dr. Hugo took out your appendix as an encore."

When the word went out that soldiers overseas wanted packages from home—the response was so overwhelming that Uncle Sam reluctantly had to call a halt. Today, due to shipping space, there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men—but you can still send packages to soldiers in the U. S., and to Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen wherever they are. When you do, remember—the of their favorite gifts is cigarettes, and the favorite brand is Camel. SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Neither South American sources of natural rubber nor expansion of Guayule Cryptostegia and all other rubber-bearing shrub production will produce any large amount of satisfactory rubber for some years, according to government agencies.

In 1941, 86 per cent of all travel by Americans was in cars.

No gas? No cars! Ban on pleasure driving brought a drop of about 80 per cent in the passenger cars on the streets of New York City. Joy walkers had a holiday in the automobile deserted main streets.

Five in a car instead of just the driver and one passenger means that 8 tires are saved, if the average of three cars to five war plant workers is considered. The amount of rubber in 8 tires is enough for 72 gas masks, or for life rafts and rubber life jackets for 9 plane crews.

Crop and Livestock Notes By County Agent's Office.

Pasture and hay crops prospect were greatly improved by the rains of the past week.

The grain market and supply situation justifies farmers to consider their livestock-feed rates and to produce a maximum of feed crops in 1943.

It is still time to seed alfalfa. Excellent stands in favorable years are secured from seedings as late as June 1st.

Dairy cows will require less feed on good pasture. Where the pasture is excellent Jersey and Guernsey cows should produce up to 2 to 2½ gallons of milk per day with no grain feed. Above this production feed one pound of grain for each two pounds of milk. Poorer pasture requires more grain feeding.

The largest number of gardens and the best prospects for gardens in many years are now in the making. Remember control the insects and to destroy all weeds in order to produce the maximum amounts of food.

Sheep should be drenched for stomach worm control the day after they are sheared. The Bluestone—Black Leaf 40 treatment is the best from now until fall.

Contour cultivation, hill side ditches and other erosion control measures conserves moisture and increases yields.

Adapted hybrid corn varieties out produce open pollinated varities and carry greater assurance against drought damage. Stronger germination gives better stands, saves seed and requires less thinning.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"I couldn't help overhearing you, Mary, when you asked Jim here why they let the liquor companies use sugar to make whiskey when all the rest of us have to cut down on it. I happen to know the answer to that.

"You see, the fact of the matter is, the industry never has used a single pound of sugar to make whiskey. The bootleggers were the only ones who used sugar to make whiskey. On top of that, there's not a single large distillery in the country making whiskey any more. They're all working day and night making war alcohol for the government for gunpowder, synthetic rubber, chemicals, and medical supplies.

"Just as I told Ed down at the courthouse this morning, the government simply wouldn't be able to get all this alcohol it needs in time if we didn't have these distilleries available and on the job."

Ceiling Placed On Used Commercial Motor Vehicles.

"The Office of Price Control has placed a dollars and cents ceiling on all used commercial motor vehicles (or trucks), used mechanical refrigerators and used domestic washing machines. These items are not being manufactured any more and it is absolutely necessary that the prices be controlled at consumer levels to assure an adequate distribution of the above used commodities.

The sale of the three above items is governed by special regulations, whether by private owners, dealers or reconditioners. We suggest that you call your Local War Price and Rationing Board when there is any doubt as to the price that should be charged or any other information regarding these regulations."

49 YEARS AGO

May 16, 1894, set out 2¼ acres of tobacco—May 18 another 1½ acres set out, May 19 was cold enough for an overcoat and cap ears.

The following was taken from Williamstown Courier, May 20th, people were terribly surprised when they got out of bed this morning to find about 3 inches of snow on the ground. Until 10 o'clock the snow continued to come down like a regular January day; Trees and shrubbery were bent to the ground under the weight of the snow; grass and small grain , almost crushed into the ground by the weight. cucumbers and muskmellons were killed. Tobacco as well as corn and other vegetables were made very sick, but later grew out as though they had never been chilled. So we have had just as cold weather if not colder in May than we are having this year.

Mrs. Bess Conrad and mother were in Verona Sunday visiting with Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Powers.

Three Purebred Bulls Purchased

Three purebred bulls have been purchased in Boone County this spring according to O. D. Perkinson, Assistant County Agent. Although the farmers are exerting every effort to produce more of everything that comes from the farm it is interesting to note that they are trying to maintain, and in some cases, improve the class of livestock on the farm.

Mr. Jesse Wilson has purchased a purebred Jersey bull, Royal Volunteer Oxford No. 42763. This bull comes from the P. B. Gaines herd at Carrollton, Kentucky. His dam, Volunteer Royal Queen, has a record of 8,852 milk and 455.9 butter fat. His sire, Royal Mighty Oxford, is a star bull with a credible record in the showing.

Mr. Grant Maddox has purchased a purebred Jersey bull from John Peterson at Lenor, Kentucky. This bull is bred for production and a very good individual.

Sam Sleet has purchased a purebred Hereford bull to head his herd. This bull comes from the R. R. Giltner herd in Henry County. Mr. Sleet is expecting Kentucky Mischief 3126333 to improve both type and size in his herefords.

Four Drown At Warsaw Saturday

Three young men and a boy drowned Saturday when an outboard motor boat, in which they were returning from Warsaw to their home at Florence, Ind., sapized in the Ohio River.

The young men were Leslie Ikler, "Nippie" Chase, and William Lanqquert, all between 21 and 25 years old, and the boy was a nephew of "Nippie" Chase, it was reported by Charles D. Hall, Sheriff of Gallatin County, Ky.

The fifth occupant of the boat, Private Wilford Chase, was rescued when Jeff Webb, operator of the Warsaw Ferry, threw him a life preserver from the ferry, Hall said. Wilford Chase, also from Florence, is on furlough from an Army camp.

Webb told Hall that all five occupants of the boat were seen after the boat had capsized in the middle of the river, but that the four victims had disappeared beneath the surface before help could reach them.

A Coast Guard unit was summoned from Carrollton to search for the bodies.

The quintet had been in Warsaw most of the afternoon. The boat, which was wrecked ,was the property of Gus Bladen, Florence.

Webb told Hall that he did not know whether the boat had struck an object in the river. Parents of the victims reside in Florence, just across the Ohio River from Warsaw.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Invasion of Attu Is Second Step In Drive to Oust Japs From Aleutians; Discount Rumors of Nazi-Italian Rift As Allies Plan Heavy Knockout Blows

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Pictured are members of the delegation of the United States to the United Nations conference on food and agriculture at Hot Springs, Va. Left to right, seated: Murray D. Lincoln, executive secretary of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation; Miss Josephine Schain; Judge Marvin Jones, conference chairman. Standing: Paul H. Appleby, undersecretary of agriculture; W. L. Clayton, assistant secretary of commerce, and Thomas Parran, M.D., surgeon general, U. S. Public Health Service.

ATTU:
Second Step in Aleutians

Firmly established on Attu, westernmost of the Aleutian islands in Japanese hands, strong American forces pushed forward against bitter opposition by the enemy.

First to admit the American landings, the Japs also were first to confess that heavy U. S. aerial and naval bombardments provided an irresistible cover for a continuing stream of reinforcements.

Presaging their defeat on Attu, the Japs made much of the claim that their troops were fighting numerically superior forces.

In Washington, Col. R. Ernest Dupuy declared that the attack on Attu was the second step in the drive to oust the Japs from the Aleutians. The first, he said, was the American occupation of Amchitka and Adak to establish bases from which to strike not only Attu but also Kiska, 172 miles to the east.

FOOD CONFERENCE:
Post-War Agriculture

Reconstruction of agriculture in Europe after the war was the principal subject of discussion among the representatives attending the United Nations food conference in Hot Springs, Va.

According to Marvin H. Jones, chairman of the parley and head of the U. S. delegation, conferees are chiefly concerned with getting the farmlands of reclaimed countries back into production.

Problems connected with such an effort, such as adequate distribution of supplies and materials, and the planning for the production of crops which would furnish local populations with nutritional diets, were brought into study.

The conference, in the nature of a discussion, brings no binding agreements among the nations, Jones said. Representatives will present conclusions of the conference to their respective governments for further action.

ITALY:
No Setup

After a sudden welter of rumor, it appeared as though the Allies would have to take Italy the hard way. The Italians and Nazis gave no sign of handing it over on a silver platter.

King Victor Emmanuel answered wild rumors originated by the Free French that he was about to abdicate by appearing at an art exhibition in Rome to receive the applause of his subjects.

Talk that Hitler was preparing to abandon Italy to its fate and draw all Nazi forces into the Brenner pass were immediately counteracted by plentiful assurances in the German press that Der Fuehrer had no such idea.

Allied airmen apparently were the first to take these rumors with a grain of salt. Even as the abdication talk, etc., intrigued the arm chair strategists, bombers were plastering the seaplane base of Lido di Roma, 15 miles from the Italian capital. Hangars, moorings and planes were the targets.

Rome admitted damage in the vicinity, but claimed Axis planes had bombed Algerian harbors "with good results."

RECIPROCAL TRADE:
Renewal Fought

Renewal of President Roosevelt's authority to negotiate reciprocal trade treaties with foreign countries was the subject of heated debate in congress, with successful efforts to limit the life of the President's power to two years.

Claimed as a great contribution to stable international relations by its advocates, and opposed as a dangerous threat to our tariff system by its foes, the Reciprocal Trade act passed through the house only after fierce debate and a two-year limitation on its existence.

Inspired by Secretary of State Cordell Hull, administration forces contended that renewal of the act now was necessary to assure the world that we were prepared to participate in the revival of international commerce and stabilize employment and marketing in other countries.

Foes of the act said it had failed to avert war since its creation in 1934. They tried to limit its operations by offering amendments which would allow congress to review treaties; permit domestic producers to testify against provisions of any treaty, and prevent the importation of products when they sold for less than the American cost of production.

WHEAT:
May Increase Acreage

With some officials claiming current consumption of wheat will run 500 million bushels over the 1943 crop of 900,000,000 bushels, the War Food administration has been debating about the possibility of increasing acreage allotment next year by 20 or 25 per cent.

If the WFA has hesitated in deciding on an increase, it has been for fear that production of other important staples like corn, flaxseed, soybeans and peas would drop. The problems centers around boosting wheat output without sacrificing other yields.

This year, 55 million acres of wheat were seeded, and intended increases would add 11 million acres. At a normal yield of 12 bushels to the acre, the WFA estimates the extra plantings would produce a crop of 792 million bushels.

HOSPITAL SHIP:
Sunk by Japs

With its red cross sign brightly lighted and the whole vessel fully illuminated, the Australian hospital ship Centaur was silently plying through placid waters to New Guinea.

Suddenly a terrific explosion shook the ship, and in a moment, it was wrapped in raging orange flames. As many of the vessel's complement of 383 fought to escape the burning hulk, the ship went down, only 64 surviving.

Cause of the sinking: a Japanese torpedo. Even as some of the survivors clung shakily to a raft, they could see the submarine's lights flickering over the dark sea.

Said Gen. Douglas MacArthur: "I cannot express the revulsion I feel at this unnecessary act of cruelty . . . The Red Cross will not falter under this foul blow. Its light of mercy will but shine the brighter on our way to eventual victory."

RUML PLAN:
In Again, Out Again

Passed by the senate, the Ruml plan was rejected by the house for the third time, in the wake of an open letter from President Roosevelt indicating he would veto such a bill.

As a result of the action, some form of pay-as-you-go legislation was put squarely up to a conference committee of the house and senate.

The committee had two bills as a basis on which to map pay-as-you-go. One was the senate measure modeled after the Ruml plan, forgiving all of either the 1942 or 1943 income tax, whichever is lower, and only assessing incomes in excess of normal. The other was the house bill, only wiping out the regular 6 per cent tax plus the first surtax rate of 13 per cent on 1942 income.

In both cases, a 20 per cent withholding tax would be taken out of all weekly or monthly wages after deductions of lawful exemptions to apply on the 1943 tax. Farmers and professional people would pay on their estimated tax in quarterly installments, making a final settlement on March 15 of the following year.

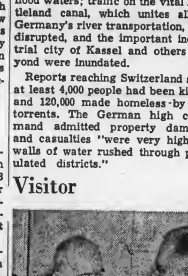
PRODUCTION:
On Schedule

"On all important categories in the President's (war production) program we are up to and ahead of schedule."

With these words, War Production Board Chairman Donald Nelson described the nation's booming industrial effort. Only in the matter of airplanes did he speak with reservation, declaring the situation was one with emphasis now placed on quality rather than quantity.

Changing needs of the services may necessitate some alterations in production plans, Nelson said, echoing reports that revised schedules have slowed the tempo of some plants while increasing it in others.

Tank production has been chopped, Nelson revealed, since Great Britain and Russia have reduced their estimates of their needs.



GERMANY:
Ruhr Flooded

Flying at an altitude of 100 feet, four - engined British Lancasters dropped heavy mines in the huge reservoirs of the Eder and Mohne dams in northwestern Germany. Then British airmen watched the mines swirl into the dams' sluices, explode and break open big breaches through which the pent-up waters roared to deluge the Ruhr and Weser valleys below.

Hydro-electric stations throughout the area were crippled by the rising flood waters; traffic on the vital Mittleland canal, which unites all of Germany's river transportation, was disrupted, and the important industrial city of Kassel and others beyond were inundated.

Reports reaching Switzerland said at least 4,000 people had been killed and 120,000 made homeless by the torrents. The German high command admitted property damage and casualties "were very high as walls of water rushed through populated districts."

Visitor

Dr. Eduard Benes, president of the Czechoslovakian government-in-exile, is shown as he conferred with President Roosevelt during an informal visit at the White House.

U. S. CASUALTIES:
80,000 Lost

In 17 months of warfare, U. S. losses have approximated 80,000 men.

Army casualties include 6,076 killed; 12,277 wounded; 24,345 missing, and 12,244 reported prisoners. Of the wounded, 4,000 have returned to duty or been discharged from hospitalization. The major losses in prisoners or missing were suffered in the Philippines.

In the navy, 7,218 have been killed, 4,633 wounded, and 12,061 missing. Since September, 1941, the merchant marine has reported 4,555 casualties.

COAL TRUCE:
Still Friends

Continuing to act in unison, Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes and United Mine Workers' chief John Lewis arranged for a 15-day truce in the tangled mine situation.

Once before, the two had agreed to a 15-day breathing spell, as 465,000 bituminous and anthracite miners were preparing to stay away from the pits. Miners were lining up behind Lewis again to strike when extension of the truce was announced.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND
By DREW PEARSON

Washington, D. C.

SUBMARINE ANTIDOTE

A history making event took place recently in the long war against the submarine. Official tests were made of the helicopter, which, despite opposition of the navy, has been urged by officials of the army and War Shipping administration for anti-submarine patrol.

Within a few hours after the publication of a Merry-Go-Round story on this subject, a group of officials from Washington, including highly interested and highly placed officials of the British admiralty, British shipping mission, and the RAF, stood in amazement on the deck of a tanker offshore while a little airplane with a crazy rotary wing on top landed and took off from a deck space not more than twice the size of the plane itself.

It was a Sikorsky helicopter, piloted by a boyish colonel who reminded everybody of Charles Lindbergh in his younger days—H. F. Gregory, from Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, who knows more about helicopters than anybody else in the air force.

Gregory made 24 landings on the tanker during the two days of trials. He operated under all conceivable conditions—when the tanker was riding at anchor, when she was running at 15½ knots, when she was headed into the wind, and when she was running with the wind.

The War Shipping administration, which supplied the tanker, had offered to remove the mast, to provide a safer landing space. But inventor Sikorsky scorned that as "too easy." Accordingly, his plane was set down by Colonel Gregory in the space between the mast and the deck house, with only a 14-foot clearance on either side.

Far-Seeing 'Eyes.'

To the British and American shipping experts whose ships are going to the bottom every day, the significance of this feat was inescapable. They firmly believe the helicopter can be used to supplement the escort vessels for the greater protection of merchant ships in convoy.

It is too light to carry much striking power of its own, except a few rockets, but it can fly out ahead of the convoy, hover over the sea, spot the wolf pack, and report by radio to the escort vessels. This saves movement of the escort vessels, which in present practice have to maneuver constantly around the merchant ships, with heavy consumption of fuel oil.

Moreover, the helicopter, without firing a shot, brings alarm to the prowling submarine and causes the U-boat to dive.

Earlier acceptance of the helicopter was prevented by the navy's bureau of aeronautics, which contends that the machine is defenseless against the guns of a submarine. The defenders reply that the plane can dart about so crazily that it is too evasive to be easily hit. Moreover, helicopters can be built for $15,000 each, and the loss of a few would not be serious, compared with the loss of escort vessels.

In any case, the matter has gone beyond the stage of argument. The War Shipping administration is determined to have helicopters, and if the navy won't come along, WSA will make a deal with the coast guard to train pilots, and another deal with the war department to place the planes on its ships.

ARMY AND COAL MINES

John L. Lewis would have got the surprise of his life if he could have had a dictaphone recording of the conversation of Secretary of War Stimson and Gen. B. B. Somervell regarding the use of troops in taking over the coal mines.

Lewis had expressed public apprehension that the army had a plan to seize the coal mines in case of a strike. Undoubtedly subordinate army officers did have such a plan in mind.

But when Secretary Stimson sat down with Secretary Ickes, plus General Somervell and other army officers, the army expressed vigorous opinions to the contrary. General Somervell, accused by some of wanting the army to take over all civilian activities, made this remark:

"The last thing we want is an issue of the army against the people."

Secretary Stimson also expressed relief that Secretary Ickes, known as a staunch defender of civil liberty, had been selected by the President to handle the coal crisis. He offered Ickes every co-operation but expressed the hope that he would not have to use troops.

Allied Food Conference Envisions World Council

International Group Would Be Empowered to Oversee Production, Distribution of 'Bread And Beef' to Feed Society of Nations.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Back in the summer of 1940, I sat in a chair under a whispering tree and looked out over a wide and barbered lawn. The mountains were about us. We were resting in a nest carved out of the wilderness and equipped with all the luxuries that a pampered human could demand. Lovely, indolent women in sports dresses sat at tables under colored umbrellas. Handsome, indolent youths in blazers lolled beside them. Negro servants padded about with tall, cooling and expensive drinks.

I call it a "nest." I belonged there just like a cuckoo but I enjoyed it. It was all right. It helped circulate the money (I was a guest at a bankers' convention). But I thought back. Six months before I had ridden in an army transport plane over shudderihg Europe. I looked about and saw the easy, harmless but useless life about me, made possible by the easy harvesting of America's riches.

I sighed (a little enviously) and said to myself: "This can't last."

It is a strange coincidence that today, at this very same spot, representatives of the United Nations are gathering to try to write the prescription for the third freedom—freedom from want.

This gathering isn't concerned with summer resorts de luxe although it meets at one. It is concerned with the proposition: We must raise the standard of living all over the globe so that the underfed can produce enough of their handiwork to exchange it for enough to eat—something they just never had before.

It is just too big for me to grasp, but what's a heaven for, asks Browning, if our reach doesn't exceed our grasp?

World Council

This plan envisions an international council at the head of a system of administrative bodies among which would be an agricultural council, supported by an agricultural bank (all this international) which would direct groups studying and applying nutrition standards, directing the supply of products, storing surpluses, shifting crops to balance supply and demand, maintaining ever-normal storehouses of non-perishable crops, adjusting processing of perishable crops, developing new markets, taking care of relief in devastated or stricken areas, advising and assisting the poorer population groups to increase their efficiency and consumption.

In other words, these people who have spent hours and months and devoted arduous labor to working out this idea are trying to furnish the plan for economic machinery to hold up the hands of the political effort of a league of nations, new style—the bone and sinew, the bread and oil to feed a society of nations joined together under one political umbrella of world co-operation.

Such an idea is laughed out of court in advance by the folk who talk of crazy dreamers, impractical long-hairs and the like. Maybe it is impossible. But a lot of people are saying: "Well, for heaven's sake, let's try it, let's try anything—nothing can cost more in blood, sweat and dollars than war."

The United States proved a lot of things were possible under the sharp lash of war which would have been sneered into oblivion if they had been blueprinted before Pearl Harbor.

Take an egg, for example. Nothing up our sleeves. Just an egg.

"Before the war," says Frank Wilson of the department of commerce, "when Biddy, the hen, laid an egg in Cole county, Missouri, her subsequent cackle of satisfaction was based on the anticipation that that egg might get as far as Sedalia, St. Louis or, on rare occasions, New York."

Then Hitler dreamed up a world war and somebody dreamed up a thing called lend-lease. Today, Biddy's product goes around the world.

Dehydration

Scientists invented dehydration and the process, as far as eggs are concerned, is only a year and a half old. Before the war, only 10 firms dried eggs to any extent and most of those dried albumen only. Today, according to Mr. Wilson, 130 egg-drying plants, big ones, mostly scattered through the Middle West, are drying eggs. Wilson predicts that before the war is over, 35 per cent of America's three billion dozens of eggs will be treated for processing annually.

And so the fragile egg, formerly shipped only short distances, can travel anywhere. How great the American market for dehydrated eggs will be depends on to what extent the consumer takes to the idea, undoubtedly world consumption will increase because of the excellent lend-lease sampling and the ease of shipment.

You may not be able to deliver your quart of milk from the Wisconsin milk shed to the Hottentot's front porch but you can get your dried milk or dehydrated eggs there—if you can adjust things so the Hottentot can produce enough to trade for what you have to sell. This applies to many other products. At present, if everybody could buy them, all the shirts made in peacetime wouldn't produce a shirt and a half per back.

It's the old story right down the line—we can invent the machinery to make anything. We are away behind in our inventions to improve the human lot. It's no harder but it takes more imagination. You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink, they say. The problem with humans is different. You've got the hungry man and the table and the food, but so far you haven't been able to fix things so you can lead him to it.

Russ-Jap Friendship—And American Ships

On May 7, Washington had the first official explanation of the many bombings of the Jap-held Aleutian island of Kiska. It said: "United States air forces have established military positions, including an airfield on Amchitka and have been in occupation of this island since January."

The same day, the Associated Press sent out a dispatch dated "February 16 (delayed)." I might say, "I'll say it was delayed."

It began this way: "Despite a series of eight Japanese bombing raids, this American airbase, only a few minutes flight from Kiska island went into operation today."

I quote all this to show what a highly confidential war we are running. By the time this sees print—perhaps while I'm writing these lines—Kiska may be in American hands after a land invasion which it is admitted is the only way we can oust the enemy from this spot.

If the Japs have gone by the time you read this, there will be a sigh of at least partial regret in some quarters. The reason is this. As long as the Japs are on island like Kiska (or Guadalcanal) more Japs have to try to reach them, to bring them supplies and keep them alive. And while that goes on, the Americans have a chance to keep enemy wounds open. Japs themselves are expendable. They are cheap, the sun god has a lot of them and he's generous in spending them. But he hasn't so many ships or so many supplies. So killing Japs doesn't bother the Mikado nearly as much as sinking his ships.

That is one reason the upturning of the last Jap toes on any of their stolen, far-flung bases will be a source of at least partial regret.

There is another reason. Day in and day out, from Vancouver and Seattle, secret ships, loaded with supplies for our Russian ally have been calmly sailing away past the Jap-held Kiska and Attu, under the Japanese guns in the narrow waters that lead to Vladivostok.

Now that was a little matter approved by Russia and Japan who hate and fear each other privately but officially are "friendly nations." The question arises now: When and if we trounce the little men out of the stronghold they have dug with their fingernails in the rocky Attu and Kiska, will they be as willing to let us keep on shipping supplies to Russia?

Perhaps it doesn't matter. By that time, which may be now, the situation may have changed. The interesting thing is that the situation does change and thanks to the censorship, nobody knows it until the knowledge ceases to be aid and comfort to the enemy.

But it's tough on a newsman.

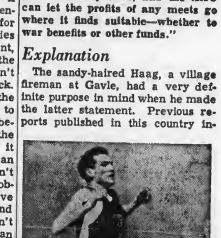
SPEAKING of SPORTS
by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE "match of the century" will develop when bashful Gunder Haag, famed Swedish middle-distance runner, arrives in the United States to pit his speed and endurance against America's best athletes.

The match of the century, of course, would see barrel chested Greg Rice, formerly of Notre Dame, meet the Ghost of Gavle, in a match designed to end a lot of arguments.

Holder of five official world records at distances from 1,500 meters to 5,000, including a 4:04.6 miles, Haag is looking forward to competition in America with all the eagerness of a rookie seeing big league action for the first time.



Haag boarded a tanker at Goteborg for his voyage across the Atlantic. In an interview before he left, he said:

"I love to run and it has always been my dream to go to the United States. I have never been outside Europe and I am looking forward to competing with America's great runners.

"When I get there I'll run any place and any time, and the AAU can let the profits of any meets go where it finds suitable—whether to war benefits or other funds."

Explanation

The sandy-haired Haag, a village fireman at Gavle, had a very definite purpose in mind when he made the latter statement. Previous reports published in this country indicated that he was unwilling, as a citizen of a neutral country, to compete in meets staged for the benefit of war relief agencies.

Haag denied the statement flatly. "I am ready to run, especially if it helps war invalids or other victims of the war," he said.

Tentative arrangements for Haag's appearance in this country include the National AAU championships, to be held in New York June 19-20, and special meets in other cities.

The AAU championship program has been arranged so that Haag, if he wishes, could run in the 1,500 meters on June 19 and in the 5,000 meters on June 20.

It is in the latter race he probably would be called upon to face Greg Rice, world indoor record holder at two miles and far and away America's leading distance runner. Rice is a chief specialist in the United States Maritime service. In New York, Dan Ferris, secretary-treasurer of the AAU, said that all benefits from meets in which Haag competes would go to the U. S. Air Forces' Aid society.

Sports Spectacle

The race should be one of those rare sports spectacles where the issue is a clean cut test of superiority between champions. Such meetings seldom take place—largely because two great competitors seldom arise at the same time.

Old timers recall that in the field of distance running, the victory of Italy's Pietri Dorando over America's John J. Hayes at the old Madison Square Garden was one of the most talked of events of the century. Hayes had been proclaimed the Olympic marathon winner in London in 1908, after Dorando, leading until a few yards from the finish, fell and was helped over the line by friends. Hayes was given the title after Dorando was disqualified.

Then Dorando and Hayes turned professional and engaged in a series of marathons. The first of these took place in New York. The crowds were slightly terrific. Thousands couldn't attend because of safety restrictions. But Dorando proved himself. He won a majority of their races, thus vindicating himself in the eyes of his followers.

Battled Its Own Shadow 10 Minutes

Story From South Pacific Fleet Is Odd Tale.

WITH U. S. FLEET IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC. — This was the Battle of the Shadow. Now that I've caught my breath and quieted my shaking knees, it can be told.

On e moonless night recently in this South Pacific war I accompanied one of our ships on a bombardment mission into Japanese waters north of Guadalcanal. The communiques recorded only half of what happened that night, because during the second phase of the mission—the withdrawal—one of the war's strangest things happened.

For 10 frightful minutes we battled our own shadow as we ran at high speed through e Japanese-controlled group of islands.

It wesn't a real battle, of course. But to every last man in our crew, ready to fight at the drop of e het and expecting anything from the Japanese. It wes as actual as the warm see swirling and slapping about the ship.

I don't intend to ridicule. I saw the phentom warship myself. Funny as it may seem, it wasn't so comical et that moment when the warships—the real and its shedow—locked in deathly combat.

We hed made our firing run close to shore against Japanese ground installations end swung away in a sharp 90-degree turn. Great black clouds spread brokenly ecross the sky, and heat lightning flashed in jagged streaks every few seconds. Our ship was frequently silhouetted as it knifed elong. We watched cautiously for opposition.

Speak American, Lady

By Lucie Kinsolving

(WNU Feature—Through special arrangement with Woman's Home Companion.)

All over the world, the American soldier likes a joke, even when war puts him in a field hospital. To keep him happy, the American Red Cross girls of the hospital recreation groups help e lot. I was the first of these girls to go to North Africa.

"I'd give a month's pay to talk to an American girl," confided one disconsolate boy. "This morning when I stepped up to a neat little French number and said, 'Bonne jawer, comment alesse vu', she breezed right past me! No American dame would treat me that way."

It's being unable to make themselves understood by the feminine sex over there that's one of the hardest things for our soldiers in North Africe, I found. I interpreted for an hour and a half to e French lady for an American officer. His tactics were Anglo-Saxon directness, hers were Gellic evasion. At the end of that time the gentleman had no idea whether the lady wes amused or merely contemptuous.

This incident gives you only a slight idea of the varied weys that we Red Cross recreation workers try to make ourselves useful.

There was a rumor that a very great American general hed said a year ego he would never "have wanted women mixed up in e war," but after he sew whet Red Cross workers eccomplished in England he definitely wanted them in Africa and right away.

Greeted by Soldiers.

When our Red Cross group docked in North Africa on the first sunny day we had had for two months, we were greeted by shouts of welcome from the soldiers. "Speak American, lady," they cried as they had in London where they had stopped us on the street just to hear the home twang.

As we drove up the roadway, the populace of varying races and religions who had learned Americanisms fast, held up two fingers in the Victory salutation, hoping this would bring them chocolate and "chue-gomme."

Some faces wore doubtful expressions, mystified by our women's uniforms, but when we came closer a light broke through. "Voila La Croix Rouge," they shouted enthusiastically. "Vive La Croix Rouge." Imagine what a thrill that gave us!

First Red Cross Club in Africa.

That very night we opened our first American Red Cross club in North Africa. Only a few hours before it had been a barnlike empty automobile showroom. But Al Fink, Herb Siffert and Jim Snelder, three of our enterprising field directors, had worked such wonders that es I played the piano for the soldiers to sing I heard one boy blurt out, "Gee, this sure is like home!"

This was in Oran, Algiers, not many days after our troops arrived. Since then in our Oran club hundreds of men have found "a home away from home." In addition to the piano, we have radios, games and at night entertainment by army musicians.

At first we hed difficulty providing snacks for the boys, but we found we could fill in the hungry spaces with mandarins and dates.

Our next job was e tough one—to organize e Red Cross hospital for which our six months' supply of everything was lost. I felt like Christopher Robin, for I spent my time going down "to the end of the town," getting warehouses open where there were priceless Red Cross stocks of cigarettes, tooth paste, brushes and shaving creem for the wounded.

Living Problems.

Our personel problems of living are easier than we had imagined, as women in a man's army on a battle front, but they are extremely ineongruous. Unbelievable luxuries are mixed with discomforts. We can have coiffures that "do things for you" but no hairpins. We have exotic tropical fruits but no pasteurized milk. Fine handmade shoes are in shop windows, but no stockings. We live in a typical French house surrounded by palms, golden cascades of mimosa, and giant tree ferns.

We have become increasingly resourceful since that hot day in September when, loaded down with musette bags, steel helmets and gas masks, a group of us Red Cross girls hitched up the gangplank of a troopship.

Our quarters were comfortable, on a very crowded ship, and we learned our first lesson then—the chivalry of the United Stetes army.

We were faced with hundreds of homesick and seasick men. I found a tin-pan piano and started playing. By the end of the evening the crowd was booming.

Smart Hats Are Being Made of Seersucker and Other Cottons

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

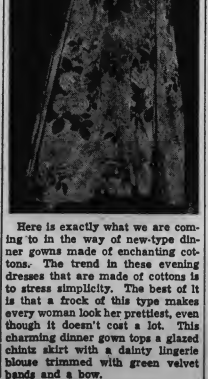
THAT gingham, chintz, chambray, pique and other cottons are being made up in utilitarian dresses, blouses, pinafores and sunbonnets is no news, but gingham, chintz, chambray, seersucker, and a host of other cottons are also being made up into the choicest of millinery confections —'tis news that's big news.

This use of humble cottons by milliners is ebout the most exciting thing that is happening in the fashion world today. Add to this program of cottons for hats the fact that gloves, bags and neckwear are made of the same materials, and you will agree that these new and unusual ensembles ere edding a thrilling chapter to the current style story. The smart postillion made of glazed chintz shown to the left below proves that neither chintz nor, for that metter, any other cotton, from henceforth can be regarded es belonging exclusively to the decorator or to the designers of housecoats and pinafores as we have been led to believe. This most amazing hat, trimmed with flowers es you see and edding long gloves to point up the costume, certainly marks the dawn of a new ere when it comes to the use of smart cottons.

Another cotton designed to go to your head is simple, ordinary seersucker. When plaid cotton seersucker appears as a stovepipe hat flaunting a matching ascot as shown centered above one begins to sense what we have been missing all these years in failing to recognize the style possibilities that exist in wash fabrics which up to this season we had thought belonged only to e workaday world.

Look at the edorable bonnet and glove set (lower right) of gay plaid gingham with bands of dainty beading run through with narrow ribbons, and you will have discovered the reason why they are saying in fashion circles that "gingham girls will be belles of the summer season." The long matching gloves complement the bonnet with high drama. Here is a twosome that has charmplus about it, and to think that simple gingham did it! And, would you believe it, milliners are even using mattress ticking for hats that hold one spell-bound because of their novelty and their air of high-style distinction!

For the neat little postillions and other smart suit hats some milliners are using black, navy or bright colored shantungs successfully. A devastating little veil gives the feminine accent.



You are apt to see most remarkable and versatile combinations in the new ensembles, such as a cotton plaid hat partnered with a boutonniere made of the same check or perhaps e breton of calico or gingham, or what have you, with a matching gilet that has a huge bow tie at the throat.

Another cotton that clicks in millinery is white organdy. Loads of organdy frills and pleatings and ruches are massed on as attractive summer hats as one may ever hope to see. The ensemble idea is carried out with organdy frills on gloves, or perhaps a jabot of the frilled organdy.

Then there's white pique that is being used in effective and versatile ways all through the hat program. Smert, indeed, are pert little pique sailors with pique flowers. Tiny calots formed of pique petals, with sprightliy trimmings of starched pique, also hold interest.

New Dinner Dress

Here is exactly what we are coming to in the way of new-type dinner gowns made of enchanting cottons. The trend in these evening dresses that are made of cottons is to stress simplicity. The best of it is that a frock of this type makes every woman look her prettiest, even though it doesn't cost a lot. This charming dinner gown tops a glazed chintz skirt with a dainty lingerie blouse trimmed with green velvet bands and a bow.

These Items Offer You Something New in Purses

The white plastic handbag is news. Ask to be shown the verious types that go to make up the new collections. Black faille bags are carried with afternoon dresses, and the pouch types are especially smert, es are intricately worked underarms. There ere large briefcase effects in black or brown patent leather designed large enough to cerry important papers and reports of those engaged in war work. Shopping bags for women who do their own marketing are made of strong cord crochet.

White 'Topper' Is Good From Morning to Night

It does not matter whether your dress be a street-length formal black, or e summery print, a casual wool pastel or a tailored pique, if you weer with it one of the new white "toppers" teamed with a pert little white hat, you will look as if you stepped out of the pages of a fashion magazine. These white toppers of corduroy, or heavy white slipper setin, or flannel are scheduled for a tremendous vogue this summer.

Sleek Lines

Dress designers are working toward a slimmer, sleeker line in dresses and coats as one way of conserving meterial. The results are all that can be hoped for and then some in the way of chic and grace and charm. The outlook is for refined types edroitly styled with long waistlines, princess effects with shirrings through the midriff, or coat dresses that achieve variety through versatile button fastenings designed to slenderize.

MARGARET SULLAVAN'S willingness to return to the screen in order to play "Smitty" in "Cry Havoc" indicates that the picture will really be something special. Absent from pictures since she made "Back Street," in 1941, she's resisted all efforts to lure her in front of the cameras. Merle Oberon gave illness as a reason for resigning from the role. Joan Crawford left the cast because this would have been her third successive war picture, and she felt that the role assigned her wasn't satisfactory.

Hollywood's best oriental actors flatly refused to portray Japanese soldiers, so Director Richard Wallace got the Japs for major and minor roles in "Bombardier" out of the make-up box. RKO faces the same problem in "Behind the Rising Sun."

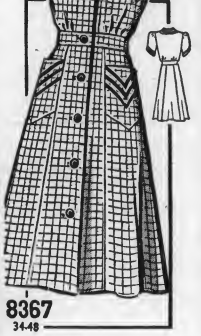
Fred Giermann, character actor, has an odd reason for wanting the war to end. "I haven't been out of a Nazi uniform as an actor for the last seven months," he explains. "Five Graves to Cairo," with Franchot Tone and Anne Baxter, is his latest.

You'll see most of the cast of that swell picture, "Casablanca," in "The Conspirators"; Humphrey Bogart, Paul Henreid, Sydney Greenstreet and Helmut Dantine all have leading roles. Ann Sheridan has the leading feminine role.

Bill Stern, whose "News of the Dey" newsreel is a favorite with moviegoers, is happy because now he can make predictions on the air. His NBC Sports Newsreel has been a Saturday feature, and he felt that even an expert couldn't predict the outcome of the following Saturday's games without sticking his chin out. Now he's broadcasting on Friday evenings, which is better.

Albert Parker was a noted director, until he lost his eyesight seven years ago as a result of an automobile accident. Recently Director Frank Tuttle, shooting a street scene in Prague for "Hostages," decided to use a blind man with a seeing-eye dog. He thought of his friend Parker, who thus, for e brief time, will once more take part in the making of a motion picture.

Black-haired Mona Berie was the first extra hired by Producers Williams Pine and Thomas when they began making pictures for Paramount nearly three years ago. They've found a spot for her in every picture they've made since—currently she's in "Tornado," which stars Chester Morris and Nancy Kelly. "She's good luck to us," say the two Bills.



Private Harry Keaton of Fort Greely, Alaska, thought that the pretty girl he asked to dance with him was one of the civilian nurses. Some time afterward he learned that she was Marjorie Reynolds, who'd danced with Fred Astaire in "Hollywood Inn" and teamed with Bing Crosby in "Dixie." By that time Marjorie hed moved on to the next camp in her Alaskan tour.

Sol Lesser, producer of "Stage Door Canteen," feels that the public ought not to pay an extre premium for quality picture entertainment, at least for the duration, according to a recent announcement. So, although "Stage Door Canteen" could undoubtedly run on and on at advanced prices, if released only in key cities at first, and shown twice a day, it will be made available for general runs as soon as it is released. "This is a soldier's love story," says Mr. Lesser, "and it belongs to the public."

A woman entered the photographer's shop and addressed the proprietor thusly: "I want this photograph of my husband enlarged. Now, do you think you can remove the hat? I do not like it on him."

The photographer carefully studied the portrait for a time.

"Yes," he said at last. "I think I can manage to fake the hair all right. By the way, you'll have to tell me on which side he parts his hair. I must know that."

The woman thought for a moment, then said: "Oh, I just can't remember, but you'll be able to see that when you take his hat off."

When you see news photos of soldiers "off duty" in camp or behind the battle-lines—notice how often you'll see them smoking a cigarette. There's a good reason for that. RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

At a meeting of the Boone County Bar, held during the December term of the Boone Circuit Court, Hon. O. M. Rogers, Hon. John L. Vest and Hon. C. C. Adams were appointed a committee to draft resolutions of respect on the death of the late N. E. Riddell.

On the 12th day of April, the committee reported and read the following resolutions and the same were unanimously adopted by the Bar and directed spread on the Order Book of the Boone Circuit Court, and a copy of same directed to be sent to the family and a copy released to the newspapers for publication. The resolution is as follows:

Resolutions of the Boone County Bar on the Death of Judge N. E. Riddell

WHEREAS, according to the divine plan of this universe, there terminated the life of Nathanial Edson Riddell on September 1st, 1942. On that day the activities of Boone County's beloved County Judge, public servant, friend and son ended, yet there remained in the hearts and lives of its people the memory of noble acts, good fellowship and counsel, so inseparably blended in his personality and being that he will not be forgotten until the children of today have also passed beyond Even then, there are permanently recorded evidences of his good life and deeds that will endure forever.

Judge Riddell was born in Boone County on July 17, 1872, to the union of Fountain and Louisa Riddell. His early life was typical of that of a son born of noble parents. He received, in his early life, the sound educational advantages that the times afforded and in these early days of his life began the cultivation of friendships that lasted to the grave.

Following his elementary education, he attended the Cincinnati Law School, now a part of the University of Cincinnati, and upon receiving his degree was admitted to the Boone County Bar in the year 1895. He entered upon the practice of the law in his native county and place of his birth, immediately becoming associated with the late Judge J. M. Lassing, one of the outstanding lawyers of the state at that time.

The trial of cases as an advocate never seemed to appeal to him. "Judge Riddell," as we loved to refer to him, preferred to counsel and advise clients rather than to appear as their champion in the trial of their cases. He particularly regretted seeing cases go to trial that in fairness and justice to all concerned should have been amicably adjusted. His true worth, however, came as an officer or public servant. While he abstained from contention, he did not relax in the study of the law. He knew and correctly applied the law relative to the position he occupied, as a result of which the affairs of his county, under his stewardship, have always been in perfect order.

Judge Riddell never allowed the holding of office to make him pompous; nor did he allow it to cause him to assume an air of importance. Litigants and counsel, in cases before him, never doubted his honesty or his integrity; neither was there any apprehension on their part of any unfairness in any ruling that he would be required to make in their cases. There was no vengeance in his makeup, yet he was a stickler for justice. Those technically guilty, when brought before him, were sure to receive the minimum punishment provided, while those culpably guilty were dealt with according to the degree of the offense charged. He proceeded always upon the theory that the law, which it was his duty to administer, had prescribed the punishment and it was his duty as a court to see that the laws was enforced, yet at all times tempering justice with mercy.

On June 6, 1900, he was married to Katie Huey, his boyhood and only sweetheart, and he cherished, loved and respected her as long as she lived. After her death in 1931, he could not reconcile his loss. He was especially devoted to his only sister, Mrs. A. B. Renaker who survived him.

He took great pleasure in driving over the county. He was a lover of clean sport and especially baseball. His favorite ball team was the Cincinnati Reds, and he enthused and suffered according to the success of that team. He kept well in mind the names of successful participants in all important sporting events.

He knew the names of the outstanding Kentucky thoroughbreds, but in all things he took life in an easy stride.

He was always strong and reliable in the counsels of his, the predominant party of the state, yet even those he opposed were never able to say that he had been unfair or offensive to them. At his funeral, many of his political opponents were seen and their grief at his passing was apparent. He had the God-given power to make friends, for truly loved he them his neighbors. While charitable, he was unostentatious, avoiding at all times everything even resembling display. Truly it can be said of him that he was in every sense a man.

Therefore, be it resolved that in the death of Judge Riddell, the State and County have lost a wise, efficient and painstaking public official, the Bar a truthworthy and honorable member, the community an outstanding citizen, his relatives and friends one whose loyalty and devotion was as abiding as time itself.

Electric Iron

Back to the old, stove-heated sad iron with its arm-tiring weight and uneven heat? Never, you say! But that's what may happen if you don't take proper care of your electric iron. No new ones have been made in over a year, so guard your iron from neglect and misuse. Make it last for the duration.

TIMELY TIPS ON IRON CARE

- Keep bottom of iron clean. Wipe with damp cloth when cool. If necessary, use mild scouring powder to remove sticking starch, but never scrape sole plate with a knife. Burned rayon may be removed with lacquer-thinner or paint remover.
- Clean top of iron with damp cloth or mild powder like Bon Ami or Bab-O. Never immerse iron in water.
- Avoid ironing over buttons, buckles, zippers and other hard objects that may scratch sole plate.
- Be careful not to drop your iron. Dropping puts more irons out of commission than any other one thing.
- In disconnecting iron pull plug at wall outlet instead of iron socket. Constant plugging in and out at iron socket wears out the terminal points.
- Never let iron cord touch hot iron or rub continuously against edge of the board. Either will hasten cord wear.
- If iron sticks, run it over a little salt sprinkled on a piece of old waxed bread wrapper.
- Keep iron handle tight. A rickety handle causes cord plug to rock on terminals in socket and eventually wears out terminal points.
- Rub the sole plate of your iron about once a month with paraffin or beeswax. Wipe off on paper or cloth.
- Always disconnect iron when not in use. Use heel stand or iron rest when pausing momentarily to fold or arrange ironing.
- Be sure iron is perfectly cold before wrapping cord around it and putting it away.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. Manila has fallen, and we have lost our naval base at Cavite. Lieut. Kelly has told how he spent New Year's Eve in the hospital on Corregidor, while Lieut. Bulkeley was discussing with the Admiral a plan of escape to China. Lieut. Bulkeley is telling about a night raid two of the PT boats made against the Japs. Lieut. Bulkeley rode in the 34 boat.

CHAPTER VI

"So we separated, expecting to meet at dawn. It was the last I ever saw of the 31 boat. But here's what happened to our 34 boat in Subic. First, remember it was darker than hell, and the shore line was loaded with Jap field guns. None of us had ventured in there since the Japs took over. We had got in just a little way when a Jap searchlight spotted us and blinked out a dot-dash challenge, asking who we were. Since we didn't know the Jap code reply, naturally we didn't answer, but changed course, veering away. But the Japs were getting suspicious by now, and from over by Ilinin Point a single field piece opened up. None of it fell near us—maybe they were shooting at DeLong in the 31 boat.

"When we were about abeam of Sueste light another light came on to challenge us—this time from a ship — maybe that cruiser. We changed course to go over and have a look, but she was small fry—not worth a torpedo—the hell with her —we were headed for Binanga and the cruiser.

"By one o'clock we were off the north entrance to Port Binanga, where we were to meet DeLong in the 31 boat and go in together for the attack, and when he didn't show up, I began to be afraid something might have happened, yet I couldn't be sure.

"But there was nothing to do but go on in alone. To make the sneak, we cut the speed down to eight knots, skirted Chiquita Island, rounded Binanga Point, and entered the little bay on two engines at idling speed. Everything was quiet, no firing down here, and then we saw her ahead in the dark not five hundred yards away. Creeping up on her, we had just readied two torpedoes when a searchlight came on and in dot-dash code she asked who we were.

"We answered, all right—with two torpedoes—but they had hardly been fired when I gave our boat hard rudder and started away. It isn't safe for an MTB to stay near a cruiser. One torpedo hit home with a hell of a thud—we heard it over our shoulders. Looking back, we saw the red fire rising, and presently two more explosions which might have been her magazines.

"But we had no time for staring, for we were into plenty trouble. One of those torpedoes had failed to clear its tube and was stuck there, just at the entrance, and was making what we call a 'hot run,' its propellers buzzing like hell, compressed air hissing so you couldn't hear yourself think. But worst of all, a torpedo is adjusted so that it won't fire until its propeller has made a certain number of revolutions—I shouldn't give it exactly, but let's say it is three hundred. After that, the torpedo is cocked like a rifle, and an eight-pound blow on its nose would set it off—blowing us all to glory.

"So what to do? Somehow that torpedo propeller had to be stopped and stopped quick, or else a good hard wave slap on the torpedo's nose would blow us all to splinters. And at this point our torpedoman, Martino, used his head fast. He ran to the head and swiped a handful of toilet paper. He jumped astride that wobbling, hissing torpedo like it was a horse, and, with the toilet paper, jammed the vanes of the propeller, stopping it.

"We'd stopped for all this, but we couldn't afford to wait long. The cruiser's fire was lighting up the bay behind us. Ahead, all over Subic, hell was breaking loose. So we started up, gave her everything we had to get through that fire.

"With three motors roaring, and us skipping around in that rough water with everything wide-open, I guess we made considerable commotion. Anyway the Japanese radio in Tokyo, reporting the attack next day, said the Americans had a new secret weapon—a monster that roared, flapped its wings, and fired torpedoes in all directions. It was only us, of course, but we felt flattered. We got the hell out of there, and that was all there was to it."

"Well," said Kelly, "MacArthur wouldn't quite agree. He gave you the D.S.C. for what you'd done."

"But DeLong has the real story," insisted Bulkeley. "I pulled up outside the mine field off Corregidor to wait for him. Neither of us could go in until it got light, because otherwise the army on shore, hearing us in the dark out there, would think it was Japs and set off the mine field. But when the sky got light and I saw my boat was alone, I realized DeLong was in trouble. And since he's now a prisoner of the Japanese—if he's alive—we'd better tell his story for him.

"After we parted company at the entrance to Subic Bay, he started around its northern rim as we'd planned. But just before midnight he developed engine trouble—the saboteur's wax had clogged his strainers. He cleaned them and had just got under way when more trouble developed—the cooling system went haywire. They stopped, and were drifting as they repaired it when there was an ominous grinding sound under the boat—they were aground on a reef in Subic Bay.

"They rocked the boat, and finally started the engines to get themselves unstuck. But the noise now attracted the Japs, and a 3-inch gun on Ilinin Point opened up on them—splashes coming nearer and nearer. They worked frantically, finally burned out all reverse gears so that the engines were useless. DeLong gave orders to abandon ship. They wrapped mattresses in a tarpaulin to make a raft, and all got aboard but DeLong, who stayed to chop holes in the gas tanks and blow a hole in the boat's bottom with a hand grenade before he jumped. That was the end of the 31. Then he couldn't find the raft in the darkness, and being afraid to call out, swam to the beach.

"The raft had shoved off with all twelve aboard at three o'clock.

"He waited on the sands until dawn. Then, in the gray half-light, he picked up the tracks of nine men. He followed these until they led into a clump of bushes, where he found most of his crew. They explained they had stayed with the raft until dawn was about to break. Fearing sunrise would expose them to the Japanese, they had decided to risk a swim to the beach, where they could hide. But Ensign Plant and two men, who couldn't swim very well, decided to stay. What became of them the nine didn't know, and no one knows for sure to this day.

"But the first thing DeLong did was to post lookouts, and all day they stayed in that clump, with an eye on the Jap observation planes which flew over them in relays, watching a hot little skirmish between the Americans and the Japanese on the far shore of the bay. At one point the Japs were falling back, and there seemed to be a chance that they could make a run for it in daylight, rejoining the American lines. But never was it quite possible, and in the meantime they had spotted a couple of bancas, native boats, farther down the beach.

"Two men who were sent out to investigate, crawling on their bellies through the grass, returned to report the bancas were in fair condition. So when the sun had set they crawled to them and started getting them in shape. For rowing they had two paddles, a couple of spades, and a board. They had to work fast and quietly, for the Japs were all around them—just as they were launching the bancas they heard Japanese voices not two hundred yards away.

"But a heavy wind came up, and at nine o'clock at night, both boats capsized. They righted them, but the shovels and the board were lost, and they now had only one paddle for each banca. Yet with these they continued to fight the head wind until three in the morning, when they were so exhausted that they decided to try the shore. So DeLong landed on what he hoped was Napo Point. They picked their way through the barbed-wire entanglement on the beach, and then found themselves up against a steep cliff.

"They kept very quiet until dawn, not knowing whether daylight would find them surrounded by Americans or Japanese. But when it became light, the first thing they saw was a Filipino sentry.

"'Hey, Joe—got a cigarette and a match;' they called out. And an hour later they were telling their story to Captain Cockburn, in the Ninety-second American Infantry's field headquarters tent. The nine were back with us at Sisiman Cove the next evening."

"That afternoon Bulkeley came over to tell me the story of the engagement. When he was through, 'Kelly,' he said, 'we need you.'

"'Let's get ahold of that doctor,' I said, 'and you tell him that.' This time it worked. The hole in my finger was still almost three inches long and about an inch wide, with some of the tendon exposed (but in a month it was healed, except that I can't move my finger joints). I had to promise them faithfully I would show up every other day for treatment, but the point of it was I got out of that place.

"Two days later I took the 34 boat out on my first patrol from Corregidor up along Bataan toward Subic Bay—Bulkeley, who as squadron commander rode all boats on patrol, of course was with me. It was a calm night—and chilly. Sweaters were comfortable over our khakis, although in the daytime we wore only shorts or trunks.

"Everything was going well, in fact it was monotonous. But when we were about twenty-five miles up the coast, hell suddenly started popping. Our own batteries were shooting at us. Bulkeley explained to me that was the main excitement these days—to keep from being sunk by your own side—and calmly altered course to get out of their range, which we could tell by the light of their tracer bullets.

"'Half the time those dumb bastards don't know friend from foe,' he explained.

"Five minutes later we saw a dim light, low in the water, and headed toward it. Was it a Jap landing barge, trying to get ashore behind General Wainwright's lines. Then it occurred to us that it might be Ensign Plant and the two other men of DeLong's boat who had disappeared in Subic Bay. They might have stolen a boat and now be headed home—we couldn't take chances. So without firing we drew nearer, watching the light.

"Presently it began to blink—dots and dashes, all right, but no message that we could read. Bulkeley ordered general quarters as a precaution, and the men were crouching behind their machine guns. It was about twenty-five yards away now—a queer-shaped boat, low in the water—and suddenly its light went out.

"Bulkeley stood up with the megaphone. 'Boat ahoy!' he called. He got a quick answer. Br-r-r-r-r-r-r! They opened on him with machine guns. It looked like a fire hose of tracer bullets headed for our cockpit, and now they speeded up, trying to head for shore. But we were pouring the fire back at them.

"Now we could see it was a Jap landing barge, packed with men. It had armor on the bow and the stern, and kept twisting and turning, trying to keep those thick steel plates pointed toward us. Of course our maneuver was to come in from the side, and let them have it where they couldn't take it.

"All this had been going on for about thirty seconds when I heard a cry of pain from behind. It was Ensign Chandler. 'I've been hit,' he said. A Jap bullet had gone through both of his ankles. We pulled him out of the cockpit and laid him down on the canopy, meanwhile circling the Japs and pouring the steel down into their vulnerable sides. We could soon see we were getting them. The barge sank lower and lower in the water and presently gurgled under, while we pulled off to lick our own wounds, give first aid to Chandler, and locate any other boats in the vicinity. Surely the Japs wouldn't attempt a landing with a single barge. All we got, though, was more fire from our own shore guns—a swarm of tracers and then 3-inchers began whistling over—one of them landing two hundred yards away. But we didn't mind. The army seemed to enjoy it, and it wasn't hurting us.

"We fooled around until almost dawn and were headed for home—we couldn't have got Chandler through the mine fields to the hospital until sunrise anyway, when Bulkeley happened to glance back.

"Through the half-light he could see, bobbing in the swell, another low-lying flat craft. Should we go back; You're damned right we should, the men said—to get even for Chandler by sinking some more.

"As we got closer, sure enough, it was another landing boat, this time apparently leaving the coast of Bataan, and we opened up on her with everything we had from four hundred yards away.

"But their return fire was curiously light and spasmodic. So we closed to about ten yards. Their fire had stopped, but their boat wouldn't. Our bullets would hit its armor and engines—you could see the tracers bounce off and ricochet one hundred feet into the air, but still it kept going. Suddenly a tracer bit its fuel tanks—up they went in a blaze, the motor stopped, and now the boat was only drifting. But even as we pulled alongside, those Japs, nervy devils, gave her hard rudder and tried to ram us.

PETER'S COUNSEL TO SCATTERED CHRISTIANS

LESSON TEXT—I Peter 1:1; 2:11-25. GOLDEN TEXT—Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the king.—I Peter 2:17.

Persecution for Christ's sake has been the lot of believers from the first century down to 1943. Sometimes it has been official, but more often unofficial, yet nonetheless severe and trying.

The manner in which Christians face their difficulties is one of the best testimonies to the reality of their professed faith. Sometimes, however, in the midst of their trials the enemy of their souls brings discouragement—and then they need the counsel and encouragement of others.

Such was the situation when Peter addressed his first epistle to the early believers who were scattered abroad (1:1). His counsel was just what they needed, and is equally helpful to us. They were to be

I. Separated As Pilgrims (1:1; 2:11, 12).

Christians are in this world but not of it. They are passing through, wayfarers on their way to the eternal dwelling place of God. That does not mean that they are not interested in the welfare of those round about them, or delinquent in sharing the responsibilities of life, but it does mean that they are to have the pilgrim's detachment from the things of the world and the flesh.

In the days of Peter, membership in the church was not considered a normal or respectable thing. It marked a person as belonging to a hated sect, one which was falsely accused of many evil deeds. For example, Christians met at night, men and women together for communion service. Because they spoke of this as a "love feast," they were accused of immorality, and because they spoke of the body and blood of Christ they were said to be eaters of human flesh.

Christians must meet such malicious reports. How? By silencing their accusers by their good works.

II. Submissive As Citizens (2:13-18).

One of the hallmarks of Christian character is willing and gracious recognition of proper authority, whether it be in the state, in the place of employment, in the school, or in the home. He does this for the Lord's sake (v. 13), and even when that authority is in the hands of an unreasonable man.

This does not mean that the Christian is to encourage or countenance tyranny and oppression, but that he is loyal to the state and to his employer, even though the present representative be a hard, unjust man. In all well ordered society there will be proper and effective means to correct injustice. But in and through it all the Christian shows his faith by his behavior.

Observe that government, in the plan of God, is for the purpose of keeping order, encouraging the good, and punishing the evil (vv. 13, 14). The powerful influence of the Christian Church should keep it in that right channel, or bring it back if it has strayed. Always loyal and obedient, believer should use his ballot and his personal influence to establish and support good government.

III. Suffering As Christians (2: 19-25).

Christ is our "example" (v. 21). Since some have interpreted this word and the statement "that ye should follow in his steps" as indicating that we are saved by our imitation of Christ, it is well to point out that this would be quite impossible. We would have to begin where He began—He was without sin (v. 22). But we have all "sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23). We need a Saviour—not an example as far as redemption is concerned.

In the ever present problem of suffering, we are redeemed ones do have Christ as our example. He who was sinless and without fault bore the shame and suffering of Calvary without complaint. When He was reviled He did not retaliate, when He was hurt He did not threaten revenge (vv. 22, 23), but was willing to leave the ultimate judgment in the hands of God, who will have the final word.

We ought to do the same when we suffer for Christ's sake. If we suffer because of our own sin or folly, we can claim no credit for bearing it patiently (v. 20). But when we have done well and then are persecuted, we have opportunity to show whether our profession of being followers of Christ really means anything. At this point some Christians lose their testimony and influence by a bitter, vengeful spirit.

These are trying days for the souls of men. In many parts of the world Christians are forced to drink the bitter cup of persecution. To the glory of God we record the fact that they are doing it heroically and in a true Christian spirit.

BEHAVIOR TREATMENT

One of the difficulties about the treatment of behavior symptoms by the use of insulin or metrazol is that some patients who have undergone this method, or have spoken to patients who have done so, are somewhat afraid of it, notwithstanding that they have experienced or observed its helpful results. It is for this and other reasons that many physicians are now using the electrically induced convulsions in cases where the mental symptoms are not due to any true or organic disease of the brain. I have spoken twice before about this method and in the Illinois Medical Journal, Dr. J. V. Edlin, Chicago, reports the use of electric shock treatment in 126 cases.

The length of time the patients suffered with their symptoms ranged from less than six months to 10 years, and included all the functional psychoses such as anxieties, fears, dream states and melancholia.

Of the patients who were ill for less than six months, about 53 per cent recovered; the rate for those ill from six months to one year was about 31 per cent; for those ill from one to five years it was 21 per cent, and for those ill from 6 to 10 years it was 20 per cent.

The best results were obtained by patients suffering from involutional melancholia (depressed feeling of middle and old age). The next best occurred in patients with catatonia (when dream state passes into melancholia) and then those with hebephrenia (silliness which comes on at puberty) and dementia precox combined with hebephrenic and catatonic features.

Dr. Edlin found that just as with insulin and metrazol the symptoms before receiving electric shock treatment determined the chances of his recovery; the shorter the time, the better the chances. Dr. Edlin prefers electrical to metrazol treatment because of the high percentage of recoveries and the almost total absence of fear. He also advises that the usual treatment of mental cases by questioning the patient and explaining the causes of the symptoms should be used in addition to the electric shock treatment.

X-Ray Treatment of Goiter Beneficial

In examining recruits for the last war we were always on the alert so that cases of early thyroid disease (goiter) were not accepted. When the heartbeat was fast the recruit rested for some time and was given a daily paper to read. If his heartbeat was slower after the rest and he was fit otherwise he was accepted. In some cases where, in addition to the rapid heartbeat, there was trembling of the hands and eyes were bulging he was considered a thyroid case and rejected at once.

The cause of the symptoms is that too much juice or extract is being manufactured by the thyroid gland and this juice increases the rate at which all the body processes work. The amount of increase is measured by a special apparatus and if it is plus 15 or more it is considered a case of early goiter, hyperthyroid as it is called. If test shows minus 15 it shows that the thyroid gland is not manufacturing enough juice.

When too much juice is being manufactured, all or part of the thyroid gland is removed by operation or by the use of X-ray treatments. If not enough juice is being manufactured the physician prescribes daily doses of the juice or thyroid extract.

Before treatment for removal of the thyroid gland is given, Dr. George E. Pfahler, professor of radiology, graduate school of medicine, University of Pennsylvania, in medical clinics of North America, states that the cause or causes of the hyperthyroid condition should be removed insofar as this is possible. Usual causes are focal infection (teeth, tonsils or other organ), domestic difficulties, worry, overwork or some other strain.

As many patients fear operation and delay should be avoided, Dr. Pfahler points out that X-ray treatment gives about as good end results as surgery and these patients will more willingly undergo the X-ray method of treatment. Where, however, the need for the removal of the thyroid gland is urgent surgery is the proper treatment.

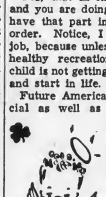
HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

Children Need Good, Wholesome Foods At Their Parties



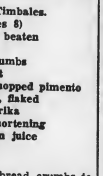
Simple parties help make children at ease with their friends, do a lot toward laying the foundations for their social success. Watch them enjoy playing host and hostess as this little pair is doing.

How do you rate with your younger generation? Are you content when you keep them clean, get them off to school, and give them some extra tutoring when they need it in English or math?

Yes, that in itself is a big job, and you are doing a big job if you have that part in smooth, running order. Notice, I didn't say whole job, because unless you provide for healthy recreation and play, the child is not getting his rightful share and start in life.

Future Americans must be a social as well as business success to be wholesome and happy. To prepare the child for this, you must provide him with a social and recreational outlet—and that means an occasional party to which to invite younger friends so the child is at ease in his role as host or hostess.

There's a certain excitement at children's parties which easily upsets their tummies, and the best way to handle them is to have nourishing, wholesome food, rather than "partified" dishes which will upset them even more. You'll find cooperation from other mothers if you let them know you will do everything to make her children at ease.



Let your decoration be a bit fussy and party-ish, of course, but keep to the sensible on the food. Have table favors, of course, for this carries out the theme and the children adore it. It stimulates conversation and keeps things going smoothly.

Fresh salmon steaks may be used in making the flaked salmon called for in this recipe. Serve it on small toast rounds and the children will adore it:

Salmon Timbales.
(Serves 8)

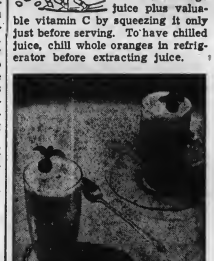
4 eggs, slightly beaten
2 cups milk
1 cup bread crumbs
½ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons chopped pimento
1 pound salmon, flaked
1 teaspoon paprika
2 tablespoons shortening
1 teaspoon onion juice
8 toast rounds
Parsley

Add butter and bread crumbs to hot milk, then stir until all soaked. Add slightly beaten eggs, flaked salmon (steam fresh salmon 8 to 10 minutes, then flake), pimento, salt, paprika and onion juice. Pour into buttered timbale or greased custard cups. Bake in a pan of hot water in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 15 to 20 minutes. Unmold on toast rounds, garnish with parsley and serve.

Few children would pass up this delicious cheese 'n bread dish—it's delicious and good for them, too!

Cheese Fondue.
(Serves 6)

3 eggs, separated
1 cup grated cheese
1 cup bread crumbs
1 cup milk
1 tablespoon butter
½ teaspoon salt



Beat egg yolks until lemon colored. Cook cheese, bread crumbs, milk, butter and salt over low heat, stirring constantly. Add beaten egg yolks. Fold in stiffly beaten whites. Pour into a well-greased casserole. Bake at 350 degrees for 35 minutes or until inserted knife comes out clean.

An afternoon party menu may consist of assorted sandwiches.

Deviled Egg and Cheese Sandwiches.
2 hard-cooked eggs
1 tablespoon dry mustard
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon worcestershire sauce
6 slices buttered whole wheat bread
2 wafer-thin slices of Swiss-type cheese
Watercress
Dill pickles

Cut eggs, crosswise and into halves. Mash yolks and blend with mustard, salt and worcestershire sauce, mixing well. Fill the whites. Cut eggs into thin slices and arrange on three slices of bread. Top egg slices with cheese and a second piece of bread. Cut in halves and garnish with watercress and dill pickles.

A citrus fruit drink is refreshing, fine for keeping up young spirits busy at play during party time. Keep all the flavor in the orange juice plus valuable vitamin C by squeezing it only just before serving. To have chilled juice, chill whole oranges in refrigerator before extracting juice.

Wholesome drink with a party air is this cool glass of orange juice topped prettily with orange sherbet, decorated sprigs of mint and whole raspberries. Orange float will keep you cool and full of pep, for vitamin C helps mitigate effects of heat.

Orange Sherbet.

1½ cups sugar
1 cup water
2 egg whites stiffly beaten
2 cups orange juice
3 tablespoons lemon juice

Boil sugar and water together for 5 minutes. Beat egg whites slowly and add to fruit juices. Mix all ingredients and pour into freezing tray of mechanical refrigerator. Freeze stiff, then beat thoroughly. Return to freezing compartment and freeze until stiff.

Peanut Butter Cookies.
(Makes 2 dozen)

1½ cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup honey
2 tablespoons corn syrup
¼ cup peanut butter
½ cup shortening
Apple butter

Sift all dry ingredients together. Cream shortening, add to peanut butter, honey and corn syrup. Add flour and roll dough into size you prefer for finished cookies. Chill for 15 minutes. Cut into thin slices and top half of them with apple butter. Cover with a second slice of dough and seal as for a tart. Bake in a slow oven (325 degrees) for 25 minutes.

BLACK PUSSY ALMOST CATCHES A GOOD BREAKFAST

BLACK PUSSY was out very early hunting for her breakfast. Not that she needed to hunt for her breakfast! Oh, my no! Black Pussy didn't need a single thing. Every morning Farmer Brown's Boy filled a saucer with warm fresh milk for her, and every day she had all the meat that was good for her; so there wasn't the least need in the world for her to go hunting. Black Pussy was just like all cats. Lying before the fire in Farmer Brown's house, blinking and purring contentedly, she seemed too good-natured and gentle to hurt anyone, and all Farmer Brown's family said that she was and believed it.

You see, Farmer Brown's folks really didn't know Black Pussy. But the little forest and meadow people did. They knew that Black Pussy was just like all cats—fierce and cruel down inside.

This particular morning Black Pussy had chosen to have a look along the old stone wall on the edge of the Old Orchard. Many times she had hunted Striped Chipmunk there. She didn't know enough about the ways of the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows to know that this cold weather had sent Striped Chipmunk down into his snug bedroom underground for a long sleep, so she sneaked along from stone to stone hoping that she would surprise him. She had gone half the length of the old wall, without a sign of anything to catch, when she heard voices that put all thought of Striped Chipmunk out of her head. Crawling flat on her stomach to keep out of sight, she softly worked nearer and nearer until, peeping from behind a big stone in the old wall, she could see Chatterer, the Red Squirrel, Peter Rabbit and Sammy Jay talking so busily, and so much excited, that they didn't seem to be paying attention to anything else.

Sammy Jay was safe because he was sitting in an old apple tree, but Chatterer was on the old wall and Peter was on the ground. Which should she catch? Peter would make the biggest and best breakfast, but Black Pussy hadn't forgotten the terrible kick he had once given her when she had caught little Miss Fuzzytail up in the Old Pasture, and she had great respect for Peter's stout hind legs. She would be content to catch Chatterer this morning.

More slowly and more carefully than ever Black Pussy stole forward. Her eyes grew yellow with excitement, and fierce and cruel. At last she reached a place where one good jump would land her on Chatterer. Carefully she drew her feet under her to make the jump. The end of her black tail twitched with eagerness. Just as she got ready to spring there was a shrill scream from Sammy Jay. He had caught sight of the moving tip of that tail, and he knew what it meant. Black Pussy sprang, but she was just too late. Chatterer had dived headfirst down between the stones of the old wall at the sound of Sammy's scream and Peter had dived headfirst into Johnny Chuck's house, on the door-step of which he happened to be sitting.

Black Pussy looked up at Sammy Jay and snarled at him in a terrible rage. Sammy shrieked at her just as angrily. Then, when her head was turned for just an instant, he darted down and actually pulled a tuft of hair from her coat and was safely out of the way before she could turn and spring. Then Black Pussy thrust a paw down between the stones where Chatterer had disappeared. She pulled it out again with a yowl of pain, for sharp little teeth had bitten it. Slowly and sullenly, Black Pussy turned and limped back toward Farmer Brown's house. She suddenly remembered that saucer of milk, and that that was really all the breakfast she wanted.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

When our present synthetic program has materialized, a B.F.Goodrich official predicts the resistant rubber surplus will cause one of the most serious post-war marketing problems. What to do with the huge stocks of synthetic and natural rubber will test the ingenuity of manufacturers and sales executives.

A substitute for rubber adhesive tape is being sought. Thousands of pounds of this tape are being used to protect plastic airplane glass in transit to airplane factories.

Seventy-three per cent of the 140,000 workers of 94 war plants in 10 states go to and from work by private automobiles. Nearly three-quarters of the cars used by these workers have tires more than half worn out, many of them unfit for re-capping.

CONTROL CAN DO WHAT PROHIBITION CAN'T!

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"How soon do you leave for camp, Bob?"

"Next Tuesday, Judge. Bill and George are leaving the same time. We're hoping to wind up in a tank outfit."

"Well, the way I've seen you handle a tractor, Bob, you ought to be right at home in one of those tanks. You're going to like the service—they're a great bunch of fellows. Just last week I went down to camp to see a young nephew of mine and he introduced me to some of his buddies. Fine fellows—real he-men just like you and Bill and George—from good American homes. Handle themselves well, too.

"You know, I've been checking up on it, Bob, and I've found out that the American army today is healthier, better disciplined, better trained, better taken care of than it has ever been in its history. And you can take my word for it, Mary, he'll come back to you a fine man in great shape. Best of luck to you, Bob."

KEEP MILK PRODUCTION UP WHILE PRICES ARE HIGH

Right now you have an opportunity to cash in on high milk prices. Many farmers are "cashing in" by adding Wayne I-Q Dairy Feeds to their grains and roughage. They know that milk producing cows need extra minerals and vitamins, and that Wayne I-Q Dairy Feeds are made to supply just the right combination of these nutrients. No matter what combination of grains and roughage are available, we can outline a profitable feeding plan for you.

Farmers Urged To Plant Crops

Farmers are urged to plant their maximum of food and feed crops acording to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

The U. S. government crop and markets report for April states the following.

"If this liberal feeding (livestock) continues, stocks of corn and oats remaining on farms on July 1, will be down to about the 1938-41 averages for that date, whereas units of livestock and poultry on farms are likely to be 20 to 25 percent above the average in those years."

The College of Agriculture reports, points out the increased difficulties in transportation of feed or the surplus feed producing states to Kentucky, a deficit producing area.

The whole program points out the great need for the farmer to produce a maximum of food and feed crops.

This need is in the face of one of the most backward seasons and of the most acute labor shortages on record.

We will all get farther on our food and feed production program if we work together. The following accomplishments will aid:

1. Solve your labor, machinery and seeding problems locally in your own neighborhood through hiring, exchanging or other plans.

2. Take those labor and machinery problems to your county labor assistant at the County Agent's office in Burlington where they can not be solved locally.

3. Don't give up—Get the job done.

Several former residents of Walton were here during the week end to decorate the graves of their loved ones.

Aleen Conner Employed In Secretary of State's Office.

Mrs. Aleen Conner of Walton, Kentucky has taken a position at Frankfort, Ky. in The Secretary of State's Office. She started her work there last Thursday. She is a filling clerk in this office and says she likes her work fine. She lives at Frankfort and journeys home for the week-end. The people of Walton miss this fine lady, but wish her success in her work there.

Her Insurance Office in Walton is being taken care of by her sister, Miss Ella Mae Chambers during her absence.

WITH THE REDS

Results of the weekday starting time poll recently conducted by the Reds show that war workers in the defense plants are heavily in favor of morning games, and that fans attending games at Crosley Field are in favor of afternoon and twilight games. General Manager, Waren Giles has announced that the schedule will be arranged to include games around the clock, in keeping with the preference of the voters.

Defense workers' ballots, cast at the plants, were 60% in favor of the morning contests, while at Crosley Field 49% favored regular afternoon games at the present starting time, and an additional 30% voted for games at 5 to 5:30 P. M. Only 2% voted for morning games.

A composite tabulation of all the ballots, including those at the defense plants and at Crosley Field, reveals that 25% voted for the present afternoon starting time of weekday games, 22% voted for twilight games from 5 to 5:30 P. M. and 31% voted for morning games from 10:30 to 11.

Many voters wrote on their ballots requests for additional night games. The Reds' present schedule calls for seven night games, seven less than the limit of 14 allowed in the major leagues. General Manager Warren Giles wants to study the night game situation before making any definite decision as to an increase in the number of games.

Two morning games already have been played at Crosley Field on May 3 and 28. One twilight game was played on May 7. The second twilight game of the year will be played at Crosley Field Tuesday, June 1st, against the Giants. The third morning game will be played on Thursday, June 24, between the Reds and St. Louis.

Following is the new schedule of starting times: Morning games, 11 A. M., Weekday afternoon games, 3 P. M., Twilight games, 5:30 P. M., Night games, 9 P .M., Saturday and Sunday single games, 2:30 P. M. and Doubleheaders, 1:30 P. M.

Not In Uniform-- But In The Army

The milker on the nation's farms may not be in khaki or in service blue, but he surley is in the army, so far as victory is concerned. He's part, yes, and a vital part, of the production army and fighters can't win without food as well as guns.

Never has the dairy industry been asked to do so much—the needs of the armed forces, lend-lease demands, and the nutrition program on the "home front". A three-way call for more, more and more milk and milk products.

Every day the milker does his part to keep full milk cans rolling to city and factory. There's no "time off" in the milk business—Old Madam Cow keeps producing and must be milked twice a day or three times every day in the week.

The milker is just as important to the fighter, as the man on the production line who sends him bullets and guns, for a sick, starved soldier cannot fight to victory, and milk and milk products are vital in fighting rations.

The young man, milking, may feel that he should be in khaki or service blue, but he may well be serving victory best by staying where he is—keeping the milk supply on its way to soldier, sailor, allies and civilians.

Salute the dairy farmer and his crew of milkers who make possible the "crop" of milk and milk products, cheese, butter, dried milk, evaporated milk and ice cream which the world today so urgently requires. "U. S. needs us strong."

County Agents to Help Farmers in Securing Workers.

Under provisions of a recent act of Congress, the Extension Service of the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics is helping farmers find additional workers this season. Offices of county agents are being used as clearing houses where farmers can file applications for workers, and where men, women and boys and girls can offer their services on farms.

Cooperating with county agents, in the farm labor program, are local labor committees, local farm labor committees, local boards of defense, the United States Employment Service, the Farm Security Administration and other agencies.

Farmers are urged to try to determine how much help they will need, and when they will need it, and then file applications with county agents, or other agencies, as soon as possible. This will give the agents, and cooperating agencies, time to locate workers.

The State College of Agriculture suggests that farmers exchange labor, trade hand work for machine work, and help one another to get certain jobs done.

National plans for recruiting farm labor include a U. S. Crop Corps of several hundred thousand men; a half million non-farm youth, principally high school student, to be known as Victory Farm Volunteers; and possibly 60,000 women enrolled in a Women's Land Army.

Flock Owners Should Treat Sheep

All sheepmen should treat their flocks regularly for stomach worms according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Stomach worms are practically always present and regular treatments and pasture rotation seems to be the best control measures.

The College of Agriculture is recommending two treatments especially this year.

Phenothiazine a short time before and a short time after lambing for the control of nodular worms. Nodular worms are probably not controlled by any other treatment.

Bluestone-Black Leaf 40 combinations treatment given about every three weeks to a monthduring the summer and fall until freezing weather. One ounce of Bluestone and ¾th of one ounce of Black Leaf 40 to three quarts of water, will make enough solution to treat 25 adult sheep.

College of Agriculture Extension circular No. 152 gives some helpful hints on stomach worm treatment.

Public Should Not Ride Trains Unless It Is Absolutely Necessary.

For the first time in its history, the Southern Railway System is asking people not to ride on the railway's trains unless it is absolutely necessary. This unusual appeal is contained in a statement to the public by Ernest E. Norris, President of the Southern.

'Pleasedon't ride on a Southern Railway train this summer-unless you conscientiously believe that your trip is necessary." These are the precedent-shattering words of Mr. Norris, who added that he never thought the time would come when he would ask the public not to ride on the Southern's trains. "But that time has come," he explained, "an inescapable by-product of our nation's fight for Victory."

"The South is serving the Nation as the location of many important war industries going at top speed and more than half of all the larger training camps and military establishments in the country," Mr. Norris continued. "This means simply that our passenger facilities this summer wil undoubtedly be strained to the limit. Many of our passenger cars and locomotives will be assigned to troop movements. Our regular trains and our stations are bound to be literally jammed with men and women in uniform, traveling under orders and on furlough, and civilians traveling in connection with war work.

"We're going to do our level best to handle this heavy load, including those civilians who conscientiously believe that they must travel. But, until our trains and stations are no longer overcrowded by essential travel, we hope that you will patriotically forgo unnecessary travel over our lines."

Mr. and Mrs. K. E. Huddleston and daughter, Rebecca of Lexington and Bobby Loomis of Newport spent the week-end with Mrs. Huddleston's parents, Mr. and Mrs E. M. Johnson of North Walton. Mr. and Mrs. Orville Loomis of Newport were also guest Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Helmer (nee Rose Ella Worthington) are rejocing over the arrival of a 7½ lb. daughter, borned May 21st at St. Elizabeth Hospital. The little Miss has been named Rose Ann. Both mother and baby are getting along nicely.

Boone County Farm Labor Notes

The sheep shearing program to-date is working satisfactory. Lots of work remains to be done.

Approximately fifteen applications for tenants, farm help by day and month, and custom work has been received to date. Dairy hands and help by the month remains the greatest labor problem.

Grant Maddox of Florence through the County Labor Assistant was able to secure an experienced dairy and farm helper.

Dr. R. C. Garrison of Burlington is badly in need of a good dairy helper. Doc ought to be a good man to work with. House can be furnished.

Charles Black in East Bend bottoms wants a helper by the month. Will furnish room and board.

A. T. Hunt, Verona wants a tenant to raise 4.7 acres of tobacco and do general farm work or will hire man by the month.

These are just samples of the farmers' many labor problems.

A start this week will be made to list all power machinery that will be available for hire or custom work in plowing, disking, planting, cultivating, mowing, harvesting and other work. It is estimated that the average farm tractor works less than 25 days per year. There is enough machinery in the county to plant and harvest all the crops that should be produced. The owners of this valuable machinery will not and should not trust this machinery with inexperience or irresponsible help. The result is what we have and would normally have under these conditions an acute power machinery shortage. Every step should be made to keep all needed power machinery working full time.

The labor shortage in the county is serious. All who can work or desire to assist in relieving the present labor shortage is leaving theirnames at the county agent's office in Burlington, or phone Burlington 412. Owners of all power machinery that will be available for some custom work are urged to list their machinery.

We have a big job on the home front. Let's all PLAN, WORK and PRODUCE to conserve and supply our naion, our Armed Forces and our Allies with food.

A Letter from a Lieutenant to His Sister from "The Wilds of Nowhere, The Land of Death & Destruction."

Omitting parts of the letter and with slight changes in some of the sentences, but in no way taking from the message the following is the story of "A Lieutenant's Miraculous Escape from Death."

When he was going over he said he was armed with the Bible. It was of small size, and he kept it in his brest pocket. He writes, "My buddy and I were sent out in the work I told you before was our job. We had just received important information. When the enemy discovered us, I gave my buddy the information, told him to beat it and turned to face them. It was the first time I'd been faced with the necessity of pointing my gun at a man.

I thought fast; then I said, "Lord, it's your responsibility now." My buddy had not obeyed my order. As I reached for my carbin, a shot from one of them struck me in the brest and blasted me down. Thinking I was dead my pal jumped and grabbed my carbin as well as his own. stood astride my body blasting away with both guns. He received three bullet wounds in his knees, but when he finished there was not one of them left. He was amazed when I rolled over and tried to get up. The force of that bullet had only stunned me. Dazely, wondering why I pulled my Bible out of my pocket and in utter muteness looked at the ugly hole in the cover. It had ripped through Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, on through the other books and kept on going. Where do you think it stopped? In the middle of the Ninety-first Paslam pointing like a finger at the verse. "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee. Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked." Sis, when I read that verse it raised me three feet off the ground! I did not know such a verse was in the Bible. Had read mostly in the New Testament, I read the rest of that chapter. In utter humility I said, "Thank you, precious God," and felt like a little boy that had escaped the mouth of an enemy of prey.

"When I got my buddy back at the post he said, I've had enough. This convinces me. Come on, I want to get right with God, starting right now."

Then he tells how his buddy said, "Nothing matters now but this," and refused to let them tend his wounds, but stayed on his knees until he was saved. Then he said he jumped over bunks and even ran outside and shouted it to the whole camp.

Continuing we quote in part: "Since I've given my heart to God I talk, pray and hold meetings with the boys, and God has given me twenty-five souls who have prayed through and come out for God. God led me to go after my General, and I stuck until he was grounded and came through. It took a long time. He was so dignified. The Spirit of God hovered over the tent with a sort of glimmering golden haze. I tell you, Sis, prayer is going to win this war! Not guns alone! Fervent, agonizing prayer! God is bringing them in one by one. Think of it. One hundred twenty men and one general in one regiment! When that happens this unit will be unconquerable. Pray, Sis, Pray as you never prayed before. Tell everyone to pray. Tell all America to go to its knees!

"Before each decisive victory anywhere over here, sometimes for hours, sometimes for days, there has been a feeling of people prayed from far away. The feeling is

Watch Out For Bloat In Your Cattle.

There is a lot of white clover in most pastures this spring. Several cases of bloat has already been reported on farms. The timely tips for dairymen gives the following information about bloat.

"Fix up a halter with a broom stick or fork-handle-bit in it. Try to keep a bloated cow on the move, and up hill if possible. Drench carefully (slowly without raising the head) with ½ to 1 pint of mineral oil."

In dairy cattle bloating may be prevented if the cows are kept off the pasture in the morning until the dew is off. It would be advisable to feed the cows a small quantity of well dried timothy or mixed hay before placing them on pasture. Further, one may remove the animals from the pasture after they have been feeding for three of four hours.

Another recommendation that helps is to use ½ ounce of turpentine to one pint of mineral oil to cattle one year and under, and for cattle one year and over, one ounce of turpentine to one pint of mineral oil.

Mixing one pound of baking soda with each two pounds of salt before feeding the last to cattle is helpful in preventing gas or bloat in cattle.

Homemakers Will Stretch Family Dollar

"Stretch the Family Dollar" will become a reality when Homemakers, who have kept records of their cash spending and home produced foods used during the month, will use these records as a basis for their study of household economics at local meetings during June. Project leaders found the discussion at the training school most helpful and with the use of charts and symbols they will assist Homemakers in making a picture of the use of their own money. It has been demonstrated that this method of locating leaks in the family budget is very satisfactory, according to Mrs. Mary Scott Moore.

Homemakers will also plan summer activities to include neighborhood canning demonstrations, community garden meetings and special recreational activities. The citizenship chairmen will lead a discussion on International Relations as one of the contributions to the A. C. W. W. Reading chairmen will direct a rocking chair tour around the Mediterranean.

Homemakers will welcome anyone who is interested in these subjects at their local meetings which will be held:

Several Attend Farm Labor Meeting

C. L. Hempfling, H. E. White and Joseph Huey, members of the Boone County Labor Planning Committee, Will Smith, H. R. Forkner and O. D. Perkinson attended the Northern Kentucky County Labor Committee's meeting held at Covington last Wednesday evening.

The developments from the meeting brought out the following points:

1. The labor problems in each county are different and must be worked out on an individual basis.

2. There is a scarcity of farm labor especially day labor that can be hired when needed.

3. Agriculture is an essential industry and under the rulings of the man power commission.

4. Will Smith beginning this week will devote his full time to the farmers of Boone and Kenton Counties working individually and in groups to solve their timely labor problems.

Allied Bombers Rip Axis Industries; British Delegate to Food Conference Asks 'Normal Granary' for All Nations; Reds Dissolve World Revolution Group

Weary after hours of sandbagging the top of the mile long seawall at Beardstown, Ill., workers line up to refresh themselves with hot coffee served by Katherine White of the Red Cross Motor corps. An estimated 4,500 of the town's 6,500 persons already had been evacuated as the Illinois river rose to a height of 29.6 feet. Floods raging through the Midwest made 40,000 families with 160,000 members homeless, and thousands of fertile farm lands lay under cover of water.

FLOOD:
Thousands Homeless

More than 40,000 families or 160,000 persons were made homeless by raging flood waters that surged through the Midwest, pouring over into towns and covering thousands of acres of fertile farm land. Many communities joined with the Red Cross in sheltering the victims and providing immunization to disease.

As Food Administrator Chester C. Davis called a conference of governors and agriculture commissioners from six states to formulate a program for farm production in the rain and flood soaked areas, levees along the Mississippi tottered as the dark and muddy "Father of Waters" reached record crests.

At St. Louis, the Mississippi stood at 38.94 feet, highest in 99 years, and downstream at Cape Girardeau, it reached 40.5 feet, tops in 100 years. Even as these stages were being recorded, rolling torrents moved toward the Mississippi from the swollen Illinois and Missouri rivers. All along the Illinois side of the Mississippi levees cracked.

Adding to the flood, persistent rains continued to hamper farmers' work in the fields. According to experts, planting will be delayed to late in June, with harvests then depending upon the time frosts will appear in early fall.

BOMBERS:
Pound Axis Europe

Allied bombers struck at both ends of Europe, with Axis industries and defenses standing out as the targets.

Hit hardest by the raids was the metal, coal and communication center of Dortmund in northwestern Germany. More than 2,000 tons of high explosives fell on the city, while curling palls of smoke rising from raging fires often obscuring visibility.

Thirty-eight of the bombers failed to return from the attack, which brought to 100,000 tons the amount of explosives dropped by the RAF over Germany since the start of the war.

While the Allies were busy in the north, their squadrons were equally active in the Mediterranean area, where American and British bombers continued to plaster important enemy outposts of the Italian mainland.

Airdromes, harbors and shipping installations were pounded on the islands of Pantelleria, Sardinia and Sicily. The ferry linking Sicily with Italy was blasted, with the enemy admitting heavy damage.

COAL TRUCE:
Bargain Collectively

The United Mine Workers and the coal operators resumed collective bargaining even as the War Labor board denied John L. Lewis' demands for a $2 a day wage increase. However, the WLB, which must approve any agreement, recommended that the disputants come to terms on the question of paying miners for the time spent in traveling to and from the mine faces.

Also, the WLB indicated it favored the six-day week for the miners, with wage concessions for the extra day. It ordered the vacation payment boosted from $20 to $50. All told, these payments would represent an 8 to 15 cents a day wage increase.

ATTU:
Remnants Resist

Entrapped in the mountains on the northeast tip of Attu, Japanese remnants bitterly resisted the advance of American troops slogged by sleet and rain.

As the Americans' pressure increased, a formation of 16 Japanese bombers flew in to raid ground positions and shipping. A half dozen Americsn Lightning fighters rose up to intercept the attackers, and the army reported that two-thirds of the enemy squadron was shattered.

The Japanese remnants made good use of the high ground both north and south of the village of Attu, their main supply base which had been razed by bombers. American troops bucked strong positions which the enemy had carved into the mountainside and on either side of the towering passes.

Meanwhile, American bombers continued to pound the main Jap Aleutian base at Kiska, 172 miles to the east of Attu.

FOOD CONFERENCE:
For Normal Granary

World-wide application of the principle of the "ever-normal granary" was suggesfed by Richard K. Law, chairman of the British delegation to the United Nations' food conference at Hot Springs, Va.

Declaring that the world must devise a system of international trade which will assure the passage of food from the producer to the consumer at fair and stable prices, Law recommended building buffer stocks which would be increased when supply outran demand, and drawn upon when output dropped.

Law hit the system of regulating agricultural trade by allotting importers specific quotas, say on wheat, etc. Instead, he advocated the creation of an authority that would be representative of the consumer as well as the producer.

Law's statement was followed by a suggestion of the American delegation that resettlement of millions of people may be necessary to promote adequate food production. The delegation said that only one-fifth of the world's population lived in those areas in the temperate zone in which food is produced by highly developed technology.

COMINTERN:
'Suspend' Revolution

Stating the war bad made it impossible to co-ordinate its activity, the Communist party's organization for promoting world revolution known as the Comintern formally dissolved itself.

The action met with mixed emotion in Allied circles. While some interpreted the move as a step toward closer relations between Russia and the United Nations, others pointed out that in the U. S. the Communists had formally detached themselves from the Comintern in 1940, but maintained activity along the party line nonetheless.

Although the Comintern stressed that chief consideration for the dissolution lay in its inability to maintain communication with its various branches, it also declared that it had recognized that national Communist groups were in better position to frame and work out policies on the scene, than in some distant center.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO:
'The Child Is Born'

"The child is born!"

With those words Senator Arthur Vandenberg emerged from a conference of legislators to announce approval of a pay-as-you-go income tax measure, which would wipe out all taxes of $50 and under and forgive 75 per cent of the taxes remaining for one year, and put all taxpayers on a current basis July 1.

Agreement on the measure, which now has to be passed by both houses and signed by the President, came after months of bickering over pay-as-you-go taxation. According to terms of the new measure, taxpayers would select the highest of their 1942 or 1943 income tax liability for figuring out their tax. Of the remaining 25 per cent of the tax, they would clear up the arrears in two yearly payments, the first due in March, 1944, and the next in 1945.

To put taxpayers on a current basis, a 20 per cent tax on weekly wages would be spplied after ordinary exemptions had been deducted. The 3 per cent victory tax would be included. The 20 per cent would cover the normal and first surtax. Any liability outstanding would then be settled later. Farmers would make quarterly tax payments on current earnings.

LABOR:
Study Lewis' Move

Labor circles are still buzzing with excitement over John L. Lewis' application for the United Mine Workers' readmission into the American Federation of Labor, from which they bolted when Big John undertook the formation of the CIO about a decade ago.

Lewis' application has been put under the study of the AFL executive committee, which will report back on the proposal later this summer. Although the application is expected to be received with favor, it was pointed out that Lewis' District 50 of the Mine Workers also takes in a number of other different unions organized in fields where AFL units already exist. Also to be solved is where the AFL's Progressive Mine union will stand if Lewis' United Mine Workers are readmitted.

PEARL HARBOR:
Final Accounting

Last February, workmen clambered over the 27-year-old hull of the battleship Oklahoma, turned almost upside down by the Japanese in their attack on Pearl Harbor, in December, 1941.

The workmen tied cables to her framework. The ends were tied to winches set up on shore. Then the signal was given and the winches began pulling on the cables. After 69 hours, the steady tug gradually drew the Oklahoma from the depths, righting her.

Salvaging of the Oklahoma reduced the final loss at Pearl Harbor to three ships—the battleship Arizona and the destroyers Cassin and Downes.

Repair restored the battleships California, Nevada and West Virginia and the destroyer Shaw, which had been struck and heavily damaged.

RUBBER STRIKE:
Higher Pay Demanded

Fifteen thousand employees of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company joined 30,000 other workers from the Firestone Tire and Rubber company and the B. F. Goodrich company in a strike protesting the War Labor board's refusal to grant a requested eight cent per hour wage increase. It allowed a three cent boost.

The strike paralyzed production in the country's three major rubber plants. Although Sherman H. Dalrymple as international president of the CIO united rubber workers expressed public disapproval of the stoppages, strong detachments of pickets prevented the return of employees to the factories.

Dalrymple hastened to Washington to confer with the WLB, while an official of the war department roundly condemned the stoppage as a violation of the union's no-strike pledge. In declining to grant an eight cent increase, the WLB said such an action would unstabilize pay levels throughout the industry.

POLL TAX:
Good Show

Amid the gymnastics of a gallery spectator, the house passed the anti-poll tax bill, 265 to 110. The bill abolishes the poll tax as a condition of voting in primaries or other elections for national officers.

A 21-year-old sailor from San Francisco provided the acrobatics at the session, standing on the gallery rail and banging onto a pillar while shouting for passage of the bill.

In opposing the measure, Rep. Hatton Sumners of Texas said: "There is some expense to democracy. The individual who is unwilling to pay $1.50 or $2 isn't a good citizen of this democracy."

DRESSES:
WPB Cuts Frills

As part of the effort to make more garments from limited material, the War Production board imposed new controls on women's garments.

Trimming allowance for dresses is restricted. Hip measurements have been cut to 56 inches and sleeve lengths to 30 inches on the basic untrimmed dress. Skirt sweeps are reduced six inches to 72 inches. The limits are for size 16, with proportionate variations for other sizes.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND

By DREW PEARSON

Washington, D. C.

MEETING WITH THE PRESIDENT

Certain senators who have been working backstage for a streamlined "war cabinet" got some interesting ammunition when they cross-examined one of the President's close associates at a closed-door committee meeting.

They learned that cabinet meetings, except for an increase in the number of participants, still are being conducted on an informal, cracker barrel basis, with no plan or system.

The weekly meetings are conducted without an agenda. Cabinet officers and agency heads never know what will be discussed from week to week, frequently come unprepared for policy questions that affect them.

Senators who have been digging into the matter feel that the White House secretarial should contact department and agency heads several days before a cabinet meeting to learn what problems they want to discuss with the President. On the basis of this, as well as matters the President himself intends to bring up, an advance memorandum could be prepared and distributed before the meeting.

Besides regular cabinet officers, there are usually a dozen other top government officials at White House sessions, including Harry Hopkins, Manpower Chief Paul McNuit, WPB Chief Donald Nelson, Farm Czar Chester Davis, Economic Stabilizer James Byrnes, Admiral William D. Leahy.

Time was when disputes between departments and agencies were ironed out at a cabinet meeting, but not now. Even disputes affecting major military and domestic policies are passed over. Favorite trick of department heads, who have a ticklish matter on their minds, is to wait until the meeting is finished, then pass a note to the President stating their particular problem, with a request for a private audience.

FOUR GERMANS WATCH U. S. A.

There are four Germans who know the United States better than any others. Where they are now reveals what importance Hitler attaches to the United States and its influence on the neutral countries. For all four Germans are located in key neutral capitals where they can watch Americans and keep their ears open for news of U. S. diplomatic and military maneuvers, and counteract American influence.

Here are the four German experts on the U. S. A.

Franz von Papen, German military attache in Washington during the last war when he engineered plans to blow up the Welland canal and brain-trusted various other sabotage.

Hans Heinrick Dieckhoff, ex-ambassador to Washington and one of the most skillful to be stationed here in years.

Kurt Sell, correspondent of the official German News Agency DNB, long stationed in Washington where he was generally popular. Unofficially he acted frequently for the German Embassy.

In Europe these four are now stationed as follows: Von Papen in Turkey; Dieckhoff in Spain; Thomsen in Sweden; and Sell in Portugal.

These are countries which, if they moved their neutral position one way or the other, might decide the fate of the war.

DEFEAT IN BURMA

Recent events in Burma unfortunately have pretty much punctured the one-time world-beating reputation of Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, supreme commander in the India-Burma theater.

The Japs are reported to have only abcut 50,000 men in Burma. How many the British have in the entire India area is a military secret but it can't be less than a million. However, there is one factor mitigating the otherwise dismal fiasco of General Wavell—most of his army is Indian.

Indian troops have fought well in other wars, but not in this one. Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, vitally interested in reopening the Burma road, recently has hinted at the reason.

Would it not be better, he tactfully suggested, to settle India's political problems rather than lose China? In other words, Indian troops with no independence to look forward to, are not going to fight their best.

Generals Giraud and DeGaulle are going to unite on at least one thing—an ultimatum to Admiral Robert of Martinique that he resign. But I have found that he is one of the best executives in Washington and one of the few who always keeps his word. When he promises to do a thing, he does it."

American Propaganda Strengthened by Victory

Triumph in Tunisia Furnishes Powerful Ammunition for Verbal Warfare; Axis Policy of Suppression Backfires.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

As this is written, America is preparing for the greatest assault on the German home front since the war began. The new offensive is made possible by two things: the fall of Tunisia which weakened the barricade of German morsle, and the capture of the City of Tunis, where Africa's most effective radio station for reaching Europe is located. Because of the water-jump, the transmission from Tunis is especially favorable.

The members of the staff of the Office of War Information who man the front in the battle of verbal warfare say that their fire power has increased tremendously with the African military victory. They explain it this way: propaganda is a strange thing. Alone, it is not a very powerful weapon—it has to be backed up by events. Germany's barrage of words that had so much to do with preparing the way for her soldiers did not really become effective until Hitler had begun to act; until he could report his successful aggression, his blitz against Poland helped against Scandinavia; his victory in the low countries bolstered his "Victory in the West"—the film of that name was widely used as defeatist propaganda.

Because of this principle, American propaganda was handicapped. Until November fifth of last year, the only concrete thing which America had to talk about was production. But on and after that date, the attack from the radio stations in Africa jumped from the sniper to the machine-gun class because the enemy knew that not far from the radio station were American soldiers. America was actually in the war, physically participating against the troops of the Axis.

Truth Pays Dividends

Two things, the experts point out, strengthen the American attack. First, from the beginning, the Americans told the truth; they didn't overshoot the mark. Second, the Germans played down the Tunisian campaign, failed to prepare the people for the humiliating catastrophe ahead of them. And so Herr Goebbels, supposed to be past master of the art of psychological warfare, ignored one of its main thesis, namely, that it is a weapon that turns in your hands if it is forged of lies.

As Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information, recently put it in an article in the spring issue of the Public Opinion quarterly—"Thanks to . . . the endeavor of the totalitarian governments to suppress all news and all opinion except what they choose to give out, the truth has become a more powerful weapon than ever before."

The American campaign now under way takes advantage of this fact, plus the fact that the Americans now have new and important truths to report.

There are two separate fronts: the people in the occupied countries; the enemy countries. To the former will go much of the same material as is directed at the enemy plus the warnings against premature uprisings and encouragement to the underground organizations to which the British have long been directing their broadcasts. They will be cautioned not to risk their lives until the final word is given.

Revolt in Holland

Recently, it was reported that a revolt had broken out in Holland after the prime minister of the Netherlands had ordered the Dutch servicemen to resist the German order to report for internment. This was not an attempt at revolution. Those in the know understood the prime minister's message which was in no way different from the instructions to the Frenchmen to resist the conscription for labor in Germany. The French did resist and the whole plan was sabotaged.

What the Netherlanders will do can be imagined. As the Germans themselves put it, "The widespread stubbornness of the Dutch sticks until this day to the saying: 'The Germans have invaded our country, have not conquered it.'"

For the second front at which the Allied propaganda is aimed, the civilian population in the enemy countries, the story is a little different. It is specialized for Italy where the people are frankly told: "If you want to stop the bombing of your cities, make peace now." The Germans are not ready for such a message as this is written but they may be before long.

To them, defeatist propaganda will be served in large doses now much more effective since they have tasted real defeat in Africs. Instead of hammering on the theme as formerly, "the Allies will win," the radio now tells them in a cool and factual statement, "the Allies are winning." The unbeatable Germans were beaten in Africa.

The second line of attack is a variation of the invasion warning which now also is much more telling. No actual information can be broadcast on this subject and everything that is said is carefully checked by the general staffs but it follows the line of the President's statement after Casablanca, "We will attack the continent from the northern capes of Norway to the eastern islands of the Mediterranean"—and right now, the Germans are beginning to feel the truth of this statement.

Deadly Parallel

Details of the surrender at Tunis and Bizerte and on the Cape Bon peninsuls will be repeated. Coolly and objectively, the deadly parallel will be presented; what the German government told the people would happen; what did happen; what the German communiques said had happened; what actually happened—the "fight to the last cartridge" versus the buge stocks of ammunition captured by the Allies and the German troops marching up without guards to report to the prison camps.

So Herr Goebbel's weapon, which has turned in his hand, is given a slight push.

The Germans are brilliant students but somehow their learning always seems to fall just a little short of practical application. Listen to what Herr Hitler himself wrote in "Mein Kampf" about American and British propaganda in the last war which he praised highly and which he admits he used as a model for his own in this war:

"The war propaganda of the English and Americans was psychologically correct," wrote the fuehrer-to-be as he sat in jail after his first putsch. "In the beginning, it sounded crazy and impudent; later, it was no more than unpleasant; and finally, it was believed. After four and a half years, there broke out in Germany a revolution whose slogans came from the enemy's war propaganda."

Hitler didn't know it but he was writing history that is about to repeat itself before long.

Planners for the Postwar World

Never before in history bave men expended as much time and money in an effort to plan a better world. Kites rise against the wind and the demonology of Nazidom has swept away the gilt and the gee-gaws of our civilization and left bare the foundations with all their potential strength and pitiful weakness. The positive forces of evil have generated positive forces of good to oppose them.

At this moment more than 137 important government agencies in Washington and private organizations scattered throughout the country, not counting various state and smaller local groups "are engaged in research or public education on a national scale on the problems facing the United States when the war ends," according to the findings of a recent investigation by the Twentieth Century Fund, a research organization.

The interesting thing about these studies is that most of them agree on one constructive peacetime goal which is considered essential to bring about necessary reforms and that is "full employment"—in other words, a job for everybody who can and will work. The war has shown what tremendous, potential production is possible. If it is maintained, most of our other ills will fade.

Sew-On Chair Covers In the Smart Cottons

SEW-ON covers of chintz or other smart cottons are always neat and trim and, since the pieces are all sewn to the old upholstery of the chair with rather long stitches, it is not difficult to remove the cover for washing or cleaning. If washed at home it is much easier to handle separate pieces than an entire slip cover.

A sew-on cover should be pinfitted with a 4-inch tuck-in around the spring seat and 1-inch seam allowances. Use tailor's chalk to mark stitching lines and indicate pieces to have welting stitched to edges. Here, welting is used for the side seams of the inside center back section; across the front of the seat; for the top and bottom of the outside; and all around the front of the arm sections. The sketch shows how welted and unwelted pieces are sewn in place. The welting hides the stitches if you use heavy duty thread matching the cord covering.

SPEAKING OF SPORTS

COUNT FLEET, the horse of the year, may easily become the horse of the century. Winner of the Wood, the Derby and the Preakness, the Count has been compared endlessly to Man o' War. The urge to compare them will grow if he goes on to win the other three-year-old stakes for which he may be pointed.

At one time Count Fleet could have been bought for $4,500 or less from John D. Hertz. His possibilities seemed far from outstanding. He was rather an odd looking yearling, and even Hertz, student of breeding and distinguished turfman, was lucky to hold on to him. He just didn't look like he'd turn into a winning race horse.

But the fact that such a horse as the Count could have been purchased for so little shouldn't influence you into quitting your job in search of a bargain race horse. Joe Williams, a New York sports writer, tells the results of a study made by Col. Joe Estes of Lexington, a national authority on the subject.

Results of the Study

Colonel Estes made a study of all the thoroughbred foals born in 1934 and followed them through to 1939, or through four years of racing.

Here are the results—and they are a typical illustration:

Of the 4,834 foals born in 1934, 3,080 survived to get to the track, or 63 per cent, which means that 37 per cent never started in a single race. Of the 3,080 that did get to the races, 2,909 won one or more races, this being less than 50 per cent.

According to Williams, the Colonel's study shows further that the average starter in this grouping ran in 32.2 races during the four-year period studied. The average horse won 3.7 races and earned $3,553. This amounted to an average of $108 a start.

Only 226 of the 4,834 foals—about one out of 21—earned as much as $1,000. There were 157 stakes winners, less than 4 per cent of the total.

Yes, Count Fleet could have been purchased for a ridiculously low price, and he already has won more than $200,000. But Count Fleet isn't just another race horse. He's a minor miracle.

Premature

Give the Count a little time and he may hang up as fine a record as Man o' War. But the comparison is somewhat premature for the moment. The Count has won only three major engagements as a three-year-old while Man o' War, having skipped the Wood and the Derby, went on to win the Preakness, the Withers, the Belmont, the Dwyer, the Travers and the Lawrence Realization and the Jockey Club Stakes, with a few minor triumphs scattered among them. But time may see the Count equal this record, or better it.

However, it isn't necessary to go all the way back to Man o' War to make comparisons. In 1937 War Admiral, as a three-year-old, was kicking up a lot of dust. In case you've forgotten, he was quite a horse.

War Admiral was similar to the Count in quite a few ways. He won only three of his six starts as a two-year-old, but found himself as a three-year-old. He won the Chesapeake Stakes, the Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont. Injured in the Belmont, he was laid up until fall when he returned to Maryland to win two stakes at Laurel, and climaxed his campaign by winning the first Pimlico Special.

Two Defeats

As a four-year-old the Admiral won nine times in 11 starts. His twin defeats came in the Massachusetts Handicap, when he ran out of the money for the only time in his life, and in the Pimlico Special, which was a match race with Seabiscuit. His victories included the Widener, the Wilson, the Saratoga Handicap, the Whitney and the Jockey Club gold cup.

The Count has captured the public's imagination. Even when he runs away from his rivals the race is thrilling. The Preakness, for instance, resembled a contest only for the split second that the colts came out of the gate. New Moon was a stride in front. Then the Count took the lead. It was no longer a race. But a great colt was out there running magnificently. He increased his lead to five lengths, then moved just fast enough to hold it there.

There was no close finish, but the onlookers roared their appreciation. They were paying their homage to a champion.

SPORTS SHORTS

¶ Branch Rickey, a gifted speaker, averaged three addresses a day on behalf of the war loan drive.

¶ Ardys Keller of the St. Louis Browns once played with the House of David.

¶ Jimmy Dykes, White Sox manager, once made five hits in five times up off Yankee pitching, each hit on the first pitch.

WHY TEETH DECAY

At the beginning of the last war the regulations regarding teeth were so strict that I had a sergeant examine the mouths of the recruits before they were inspected by the medical officer. The simplest requirement was that the man must have one upper molar (grinding) tooth immediately above one lower grinding tooth, on one side of his mouth, yet about 7 in every 20 could not meet this requirement.

Dr. Barton

In this war medical officers are finding just as many men with infected or missing teeth as in the last war, but with an adequate dental corps men are taken into the army and the defects corrected.

What causes decay of teeth? Has the cause ever been discovered?

In the Journal of the American Dental Association, Robert G. Kesel, D.D.S., M.S., Chicago, states that 237 investigators report that dental decay begins with the destruction of the enamel by acid. This is not a new idea as a writer in A.D. 1530 stated that decay of teeth was due to decomposed food and acid moisture.

There appear to be two factors in tooth decay, the exciting or immediate cause, and the predisposing or underlying cause.

The immediate or exciting factors are organisms on the tooth surface capable of destroying tooth substances, and material (food particles clinging to the teeth) which are converted into substances harmful to the tooth. Without the organisms and tooth particles there likely would be no decay.

Yet, Dr. Kesel points out "that all living individuals have organisms on the tooth surfaces and most of them, at times, have upon their teeth materials that could form acid." Why then do not all teeth decay?

Teeth do not decay in some individuals despite the presence of organisms and acid forming material on the teeth, because these individuals do not have the predisposing or underlying conditions that enable the organisms and acid-forming materials to start the process of decay.

Six Pointers on Neurosis Prevention

While the curing of mental ailments has reached the highest point in history, nevertheless it must be remembered that many mental cases are not cured by our present methods including the shock treatment.

Why should there not be some method of preventing the development of mental ailments or preventing those with a tendency toward mental ailments becoming mental patients?

Today we see smallpox, diphtheria, scarlet fever, pernicious anemia, typhoid fever, diabetes prevented or controlled. Why cannot mental ailments be prevented, particularly in the young, just as diphtheria and scarlet fever are prevented?

In an article in Boston Number of the Medical Clinics of North America, Dr. Merrill Moore, in pointing out what psychiatry can do to prevent neurosis—patients whose odd behavior symptoms are not due to any organic cause, no change in brain structure—says:

1. Parents should not overexcite their children.

2. Children should be taught to relax and to concentrate (put their minds intently on a subject) when necessary.

3. Parents should remember that children are not their playthings to be poked and tossed about.

4. Children are assets; raising them is a serious business.

5. Parents should give their children a sense of security in the child's own small world.

6. All along the production line the parent should guide the child and try not to let him go off the track of normal development. For example, it is important for a boy (or girl) to keep abreast of his group and be able to do what his friends can do—in school, playground, or elsewhere—even if a little extra coaching is necessary. This prevents an inferiority complex. If a child does not hold his own in his own world, he may slink off on the sidelines and become critical or destructive. He may then more easily become a neurotic or an alcoholic.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS

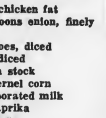
Last Word in Deliciousness . . . Chicken Chowder!
(See Recipe Below)

Get Your Protein!

There's no reason why you should not be getting your necessary protein into your daily menus, or why using meat alternates, i.e.—foods you use alternately with meat—should become a dull or difficult problem.

Here's your opportunity to show your family what a really smart homemaker you are—for you can keep up their admiration for you by serving an endless variety of good egg and chicken dishes, and fish in all its variety. These foods are protein-rich and with a little ingenuity you can make a star performer out of many of them.



Chicken comes beautifully to the rescue for it's a good, complete protein and the supply is good, especially at the present time. Use chicken wisely, however, a little bit of it combined with other foods can make a meal or more out of one chicken. Here's an example:

Chicken Chowder.
(Serves 6)

1 cup cooked, diced chicken
2 ounces salt pork, finely diced, or
4 tablespoons chicken fat
2 to 4 tablespoons onion, finely chopped
2½ cups potatoes, diced
1 cup celery, diced
2 cups chicken stock
1 No. 2 can kernel corn
1 tall can evaporated milk
¼ teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Cook salt pork in sauce pan over low heat until lightly browned. Add chicken and onion and cook until onion is soft, but not browned. Add potatoes, celery and chicken stock. Simmer until vegetables are tender. Add corn, milk, and seasonings. Heat thoroughly, stirring occasionally. Season to taste with additional salt and pepper, if desired. Serve very hot with crackers, hard rolls or toast.

Make good use of crisp, cool vegetables to go into a salad with the Chicken Chowder to round out the meal:

Chef's Salad.
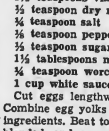
(Serves 6)

1 head lettuce
2 tomatoes, cut in quarters
4 spring onions, cut fine
2 hearts of celery, cut fine
2 hard-cooked eggs, quartered



Wash lettuce and dry in towel. Break lettuce apart, but do not cut. Place in chilled bowl and add remaining ingredients. Toss lightly together with french dressing.

Another good dish using chicken, a complete protein food, and spaghetti usually classified as a second class protein food, is combined in this way:

Spaghetti and Chicken Casserole.
(Serves 8)

¼ cup chicken fat or shortening
¼ cup chopped onion
¼ cup flour
2 cups chicken stock
1 cup grated cheese
1 cup cooked tomatoes
2 cups diced chicken
1 8-ounce package spaghetti, cooked
½ cup buttered bread crumbs

Melt fat and cook onions slowly for 10 minutes. Add flour, stir well, add stock, stirring constantly, until thickened. Add cheese and stir until melted. Blend in tomatoes and chicken. Place chicken mixture and spaghetti alternately in greased casserole. Cover with buttered crumbs. Bake for 25 minutes in a 375-degree oven.

Ever think of creaming deviled eggs? They make a delicious main dish on warmer nights:

Creamed Deviled Eggs.
(Serves 4)

4 hard-cooked eggs
1½ teaspoons vinegar
½ teaspoon dry mustard
¼ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ teaspoon sugar
1½ tablespoons melted butter
¼ teaspoon worcestershire sauce
1 cup white sauce

Cut eggs lengthwise into halves. Combine egg yolks with next seven ingredients. Beat together until well blended and smooth. Fill whites with yolk mixture, place in baking dish and cover with white sauce. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven 15 minutes. Serve hot on biscuits or toasted English muffins.

If desired, use ¾ cup condensed mushroom soup thinned with ¾ cup milk instead of the white sauce.

A dessert can take the place of a protein food for a meal and help you along in getting important body building and maintaining material, if it's a dessert like this:

Oatmeal Peach Pudding.
(Serves 6)

2 cups canned peaches, fresh rhubarb or apples
2 tablespoons lemon juice
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
1 tablespoon butter
¼ cup melted shortening
½ cup brown sugar
⅔ cup sifted flour
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon soda
⅔ cup quick-cooking oatmeal
½ teaspoon vanilla

Arrange fruit in shallow, greased baking dish. Sprinkle with lemon juice and cinnamon and dot with butter. Combine melted shortening and brown sugar. Sift flour, salt and soda together and mix the oatmeal. Blend in sugar mixture, crumbling well, then add vanilla. Spread over fruit and bake for 45 minutes in a 350-degree oven. Serve warm with pudding sauce or top milk.

Lynn Says:

The Score Card: Consumers can do a lot in stamping out the illegal sale of meat by making sure that all meat they buy comes from a carcass which carries the necessary stamps — the permit number of the slaughterer and a grade stamp.

Ceiling prices are in effect in many areas for meat. They are posted by the butcher near meat counters and you can consult them when buying your meat.

Changes have come about on the bread situation. No more double or triple wrapping is allowed for bread and rolls. No more leftover bread or rolls can be returned to the baker, nor can there be any fancy racks for displaying bread.

Retail bakers are limited to 15 varieties of bread and nine varieties of rolls in one week. Many of these measures are designed to keep bread prices down.

Although outwardly, bread trimmings have been stripped, the insides are better. All white bread must now be enriched. Each loaf of white bread must contain not less than three parts nor more than four parts of milk solids to 100 parts of flour.

PETER COMFORTS PERSECUTED CHRISTIANS

LESSON TEXT—I Peter 3:13-17; 4:12-16; 5:8-10.

GOLDEN TEXT—For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing.—I Peter 3:17.

What shall we do? Where shall we turn? Is there no help for us? Such are the natural and understandable cries of those who bear the heavy heartbreak of persecution. God's Word has the answer, for from the very beginning the followers of Christ have had to meet that problem.

Peter is especially the apostle of comfort, and the portion now before us is rich in helpful instruction. His word to persecuted people is five-fold.

I. Do Not Be Afraid—Christ Is Lord (3:13-17).

By doing good the Christian will escape much suffering (v. 13), but if even then it comes, he is not to be afraid (v. 14). He is to sanctify Christ in his heart, that is, fully recognize the holiness of Christ and all that He is and can do for him. This is to be done in his heart. That means the exercise of full faith in Christ the Lord as the indwelling Presence. Who then can be afraid?

Note that this is not just a subjective spiritual exercise for his own enjoyment—it will show in his "good manner of life in Christ" which will put his persecutors "to shame" (v. 16). How effectively that has worked only recently in Germany, Norway and elsewhere.

II. Do Not Be Surprised—the Enemy Will Attack (4:12, 13).

Surprise attack is effective. Remember Pearl Harbor! Satan is an expert in strategy, and is eager to keep Christians in an easy and comfortable mood, so that he may strike a vicious blow when it is not expected. We best prepare to meet him when we recognize that persecution and suffering will come.

We are to bear in mind that it is not some "strange thing" which has happened; we who suffer as Christians are "partakers of Christ's sufferings." Joy and glory are ahead.

III. Do Not Be Ashamed—You Suffer for Christ (4:14-16).

Sadness and depression rest upon the one who suffers for his own evil deeds, but those who suffer for Christ's sake may be ever rejoicing. Can you not see that "the spirit of glory and the Spirit of God" are resting (v. 14) even now on some who sit in prisons and concentration camps? What a glorious picture of His grace!

It is proper to observe here that the believer is not to be guilty of that which justly brings the law's condemnation (v. 15). Do not fail to note the last of the list of crimes—"meddler in other men's matters." Has not just that caused endless trouble in the church, and harmed its testimony before the world? Let's quit meddling!

IV. Do Not Worry—He Careth for You (5:6, 7).

Worry! Worry! How it does crowd itself into our thinking. Yes, we know we are Christians, that we are unjustly accused or persecuted, that we are suffering for Christ's sake. That's all true, but how is it all coming out? What about my family? Will they harm my children? If I do survive will I be able to start life anew? And so on—questions without end; and soon comes the corroding touch of worry.

What shall we do? The answer is plain. Cast all your care on Christ—"He careth for you" (v. 7). That takes an act of faith just as it does to become a Christian in the first place, but it works.

The cure for all anxiety is right there—but it can only be reached by the path of humility. "Humble yourselves" (v. 6). There is the gateway to comfort, and to true exaltation in God's own good time (cf. Jas. 6:4-10).

V. Do Not Waver—God Is Your Strength (5:8-10).

Steady, perfected, established in Christ, sure of his eternal destiny and with the eyes of faith seeing the glory to come—such is the man who is ready and able to meet the devil when, like a roaring lion, he seeks to disturb and devour God's people. The believer should be ready and equipped.

That does not mean that the Christian sits with his hands folded waiting in a fatalistic way for the inevitable to happen. Never! He is "on the alert" with his spiritual ears attuned to hear the approach of the enemy's "bombers." He is "sober and watchful" against the "roaring lion" (v. 8).

Satan is unusually busy in our day. Alert Christian people see his deadly onslaughts on their brethren, which are possibly more severe now than for many years. He is seeking to break them down physically, mentally and spiritually, to make them fearful, to make them timid about work for Christ, to limit their usefulness, and to steal from them their victorious assurance. He is busy—let us be alert against him.

There's a Parting There

This story, told in a letter from a soldier in Africa, makes one smile:

"One of our men, posted near an African village, was on lone duty when a darky native came to his camp.

"The native was admiring the hair parting of my soldier friend. Would the white soldier make a parting for him?

"Being at a loose end, the soldier tried his hand at it; but, try as he would, he could not part that matted darky head. At last he got out his razor, and, to the darky's delight, he shaved a parting for him!

"Reaction to this was that early next morning there were 10 darkies at the camp wanting 'a shaved hair parting, sah.'"

"TOWN AND FARM IN WARTIME"

A weekly news digest from the Rural Press Section of the OWI News Section.

Ration Reminder

Gasoline—"A" Book coupons No. 6, good for four gallons each, outside the eastern gasoline shortage area. Within the East Coast shortage area, "A" Book coupons No. 5 good for three gallons each, must last through July 21.

Sugar—Coupon No. 13 became valid June1, and will be good for 5 lbs. through August 15. Coupons No. 15 and 16 are good for 5 lbs. each for home canning purposes. Housewives may apply to their local boards for additional rations, if necessary.

Coffee—Stamp No. 24 (1 lb.) became valid May 31 and is good through June.

Fuel Oil—Period 5 coupons valid in all zones until September 3.

Shoes—No. 17 stamp in War Ration Book One good for one pair through June 15. Stamp No. 18 (1 pair) will become valid June 16.

Meats, etc.—Red stamps J and K good through June 30. L becomes valid June 6.

Processed foods—Blue stamps, G, H, J, remain valid through June7. K, L, M, will continue good through July 7.

More Canned Food For Civilians

Civilians will gain 30 million cases of canned fruits and vegetables as a result of reduced Government requirements, the War Food Administration has announced. The reductions are mainly for corn, peas, spinach, tomatoes, snap beans, fruit cocktail, sweet cherries, peaches, pineapple, and pineapple juice. Since the 1943 production is not known, current point values for these items will not be immediately affected.

May Use Oil Stoves

Householders may use their oil cooking stoves this summer regardless of the availability of coal or wood-fired stoves, OPA has announced. The present restriction denying fuel oil rations for domestic cooking and water heating if adequate "stand-by" equipment is available has been lifted because of the shortage of all fuels.

Pay Off Farm Debt

Increased revenue from crops and livestock should be used to pay off farm debt, said Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard recently. He emphasized that the payment of outstanding obligations, along with as large an investment as possible in war bonds, is a sound protection for the future.

Food For 3-Day Furlough

A serviceman on a leave or furlough of at least 3 days hereafter will be provided with a complete application form for obtaining rationed food before he leaves camp. He will give the application to the person who provides his meals, who will submit it to the local board for food certificates within fifteen days after the furlough ends.

Further Cheese Rationing

To conserve supplies of milk rationing will be extended to include all cheeses and cheese products, except cottage, bakers, and pot cheese, the War Food Administration and OPA have announced. All hard cheeses and most cheese foods have been rationed since March 29. Early in June, soft perishable cheese such as cream cheese, Neufchatel, Camembert, Liederkrantz, Brie, and blue cheese are to be added to the ration list.

Women Must Work

By December, 1943, one-third of the female population of working age—17.4 million women—will be required for the civilian labor force and the armed forces, said WMC Chairman Paul V. McNutt. At least 2 million women must be added to the labor force in 1439.

Lower Potato Prices 7 Per Cent

Consumers' ceiling prices on potatoes have been decreased about 7 per cent accordin gto a recent OPA announcement. At the same time, the price paid growers was increased 30 cents per hundredweight on the 1943 early crop.

Sugar Supply For 1943

On the basis of prospective 1943 supplies of sugar, the current level of consumption in this country probably can be maintained, the War Food Administration has announced. The allocation of the prospective supply will be as follows: 1,153,000 tons for the armed forces, lend-lease, and other exports, and 4,600,000 tons for civilian uses. The civilian uses include an estimated 2,258,000 tons for household use and home canning, and 2,342,000 tons for industrial and institutional sugar users.

Stocking Regulations

OPA's new regulation setting definite maximum prices on rayon stockings is based upon construction, which in turn governs quality. All full-fashioned rayon hosiery sold at retail must be marked with the ceiling price and the gauge or needle count. Gauge and needle count govern wearability, not sheerness. First quality full-fashioned rayon hosiery prices now range from 71 cents to $1.31. Hosiery with special features, such as "non-run", or mesh, reinforced heel, sole and welt, etc., are now priced from 98 cents to $1.67. Irregulars, seconds and thirds are cheaper.

First quality, circular knit rayon hosiery prices range from 28 cents to 64 cents. Hosiery with special features is priced from 36 cents to 66 cents and irregulars, seconds, and thirds for less.

Teachers Can Take Summer Jobs

School teachers will not be prevented from taking jobs at higher pay under WMC regulation No. 4, the "hold the line" order, nor will they endanger their regular positions by working during the summer vacation in war plants, agriculture, or necessary civilian services, said Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission recently.

Prices Support For Butter

Dairy farmers have been assured that wholesale prices of butter will continue to be supported at a level equivalent to 46 cents a pound, Chicago basis, until June 30, 1944, by the War Food Administration. The support was pledged last December at the time farmers were called upon to meet 1943 production goals.

Gas To Get To Garden

Driving to victory gardens will be permitted under the non-essential driving ban in the 12 eastern states only if other means of transportation are inadequate, and if the trips are necessary to assure top food production from the garden, OPA has declared.

Prices Set on Pressure Canners

Specific celings on three war models of pressure canners have been announced by OPA. Except in the far western zone, the consumer will pay $13.90 for the national model, $14.90 for the Wisconsin model, and $15.90 for the Burpee. In the far western zone, prices are 60 cents higher because of transportation costs. Production of another 125,000 pressure cookers has been authorized by the consumers' durable goods division of WPB, bringing the total during 1943 to about 275,000, more than in any other year.

Maternity Care Provided

Wives of men in the four lowest pay grades of the armed forces can now get maternity care plus medical, hospital, and nursing care for their babies in 23 states without cost to the family, the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor has announced. To apply for such aid, the wife must fill out a form secured from the State Health Department. Additional states are expected to have approved programs soon.

Mileage From Scrap Tires

To obtain additional mileage from tires that can be made serviceable with the addition of retiners, the Office of Rubber Director has excluded reusable tire carcasses from rubber scrap going to reclaiming plants. Because of this order, some half-million otherwise unusable tires can be placed in service through the Defense Supplies Corp.

Fuel Ration Change Simple

Any upward adjustment in next year's fuel oil ration for owners of small homes will be made without a special application or extra forms, OPA has announced. The adjustments, to correct excessive cuts for consumers heating small houses, will be made automatically by war price and rationing boards with the regular application for renewal of fuel rations.

Lumber For Farms

To relieve lumber shortages on farms for all repairs except those to farm dwellings, WPB has set aside a total of 500 million board feet of lumber for delivery on an AA-2 preference rating during June, July, August and September. Farmers who cannot obtain lumber with present ratings, should apply to the County Farm Rationing Committee for certificates to purchase lumber for maintenance, repair, and new construction necessary to the food production program.

Canning Workers Needed

About 400,000 workers for the food canning and processing industry will be needed at the peak season this year. Canning is essentially a seasonal, hometown industry, manned by local workers—youths, housewives, mechanics, and others—who normally work at other occupations during the rest of the year.

Food Dealers Well Off

Under community-wide dollars-and-cents ceilings now being established, food retailers and wholesalers will continue to enjoy the most favorable economic position on record, says OPA. The volume of business done, dollar margins over cost, and profits before taxes stand today at high levels, a favorable situation reflected in the fact that business failures are currently at the lowest point in half a century.

Saving On Farm Fertilizer

Farmers who use nitgogenous fertilizers — used mainly for top-soil reconditioning—will be saved approximately $225,000 within a year by the six per cent freight reductions which became effective May 15, 1943. This saving will chiefly affect sales and purchases next year, since most farmers have already bought their 1943 requirments. The individual's saving will depend upon his location and upon the delivery system of the seller.

Rubber Boots For Workers

Rubber boots are now available to the following classes of workers: miners, loggers, communications linemen, construction workers, oil drillers, quarry workers, and clay extractors. Formerly only mines and loggers were on the eligible list. Applicants must show ration boards a definite occupational need for rubber boots, but a purchaser is no longer required to turn in worn-out rubber footwear when he buys a new pair.

Extra Meat Rations

Loggers, miners, prospectors, fishermen, sheepherders, and others who live or work far from populaion centers and who cannot supplement their meats-fats rations with fresh fish, poultry, and eggs can get extra points for rationed meats and fats by two new OPA amendments.

"I never thought the time would come..."

I never thought the time would come when it would be appropriate for me to say:

"Please don't ride on a Southern Railway train this summer—unless you conscientiously believe that your trip is necessary."

But that time has come . . . an inescapable by-product of our Nation's fight for Victory!

You see, the Southern serves the South—and the South is serving the Nation as the location of many important war industries going at top speed and more than half of all the larger training camps and military establishments in the country.

This means simply that our passenger facilities this summer will undoubtedly be strained to the limit.

Many of our passenger cars and locomotives will be assigned to troop movements.

Our regular trains and our stations are bound to be literally jammed with men and women in uniform, traveling under orders and on furlough, and civilians traveling in connection with war work.

We're going to do our level best to handle this heavy load, including those civilians who conscientiously believe that they must travel.

But, until our trains and stations are no longer over-crowded by essential travel, we hope that you will patriotically forego all unnecessary travel over our lines.

I never thought the time would come...but it's here . . . and I know that we can rely on your cooperation and understanding.

NICHOLSON

"Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life as a ransom for all." The life that counts is the one that is devoted to the cause of Christ and to the service of his fellowmen, and not the one who drifts aimlessly through the world. Death can not blot out such a life, it lives on and on in the hearts of many and pours blessings upon the lives of all mankind long after the earthly career has closed what a tragedy it is for one to pass on and not be missed by the church and community in which he lived. "Who blesses others in daily deeds, will find the healing his spirit needs, for every rose on the pathway of others strewn, confers its fragrant beauty on his own."

Days slip by so quickly on the fleetwing of time and already bright June days are here.

BACK TO THIS?

Go back to boiled coffee and burned toast? Not if you keep your automatic toaster and electric percolator in tip-top shape! Just give them the proper care—use them but don't abuse them—and they'll last you for years!

..not if you take good care of your

Table Appliances

POINTERS ON TOASTER CARE

- Keep toaster clean by wiping outside with damp cloth, using a mild abrasive powder if necessary. Heating element cleans itself when current is on.
- Use small soft brush for removing crumbs from base if toaster has no crumb tray. Never use a knife or fork in contact with heating elements as they are easily damaged.
- Never immerse toaster in water. Keep dripping rags away from heating elements and electrical connections.
- Do not put buttered bread or bread with cheese spread in toaster. Spread these on hot toast after it is made.
- Be careful not to drop your toaster. You may damage thermostat or heating elements.

TIPS ON PERCOLATOR CARE

- A clean percolator is the secret of good coffee. Wash inside with warm soapy water, rinse and dry. Wash outside with damp cloth and mild scouring powder. Never immerse percolator in water.
- About once a week substitute a tablespoon of baking soda for coffee and percolate as though making coffee. This will get rid of rancid coffee oils that cling to metal.
- Always make sure you have put in water before connecting percolator. Otherwise you will blow out fuse in base of percolator.
- If you have a glass coffee maker with cloth filter, rinse filter cloth thoroughly after each using. Between usings keep cloth in glass of cold water.
- Guard against dropping glass coffee maker bowls. Do not let cold water come in contact with hot bowls.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. Manila has fallen, and our naval base at Cavite is gone. Lieut. Kelly has been in a hospital on Corregidor, but has finally persuaded the doctor to release him. He has gone out on patrol. They have broken up a Jap landing party and have now come alongside a landing barge which has surrendered after a heavy barrage.

CHAPTER VII

"She was empty except for three Japs—must have discharged her landing party and been headed home. One was dead, two were wounded, and one of these two was a Jap officer.

"Bulkeley had his 45 in his hand when he jumped aboard, and immediately this Jap officer went to his knees and began to call, 'Me surrender!—Me surrender!'

"He was talking fast," said Bulkeley a little grimly, "and he had his hands stuck up very high and stiff, and that ought to stop the myth about how Japs are too noble ever to surrender. I put a line around his shoulders and we hoistad him aboard the 34 boat.

"Then I began rummaging around in that sludge for papers, brief cases and knapsacks. I collected, among other things, the muster list of the landing party and their operations plan, before the boat sank beneath me—Kelly pulled me into his boat as the barge sank.

"The ambulance doctor, glancing at them, said he thought the Jap officer would pull through, but that there wasn't much chance for the little private.

"You never know when you're going to run into something," said Bulkeley. "A couple of nights later, I was riding the 41 boat on routine patrol off the west coast of Bataan. When we began to get near to Biniptican Point, the entrance to Subic, we cut it down to one engine, to make the least possible noise. Just before ten o'clock, I spotted a Jap ship which seemed to be lying to, near shore. We called general quarters and began sneaking up on her—still using only one engine until we got within about twenty-five hundred yards. Then we gave everything the gun and roared in—but almost into a trap. Because the Japs had prepared a little welcome for us, and this ship was seemingly the bait to a trap—they had floating entanglements and wires in the water which might foul our propellers and leave us a dead target for their batteries. We saw them just in time, and now we saw they were trying to unbait the trap—because that big ship was showing a wake, trying to get under way.

"At a thousand yards we fired our first torpedo, and it had hardly hit the water before the Jap ship opened up on us with a pom-pom. They'd been playing possum, waiting for us. But what the hell—we wanted to be sure we'd stolen the bait from the trap, so we went right on in, ahead of our own torpedo, and let her bave another at four hundred yards. Then I gave hard rudder and as we turned abeam of her, we sprayed her decks with the 50's, and every man on board picked up a rifle and began pumping at her—just for the hell of it—and the Japs were dishing it right back, but not for many seconds. Because all of a sudden—Bam! It was our first torpedo striking home, and pieces of wreckage fell in the water all around us. The explosion gave us our first clear look at her. She was—or had been until then—a modern, streamlined 6,000-ton auxiliary aircraft carrier.

"But the Japs weren't through with us. A battery of about half a dozen 3-inch guns opened up on us from the shore—by the flashes we could see they were pumping it to us as fast as they could load, and they certainly took our minds off our other troubles. So with big splashes all around us, we executed that naval maneuver technically known as getting the hell out of there, swerving, weaving, avoiding those damned wire nets, and trying to figure out where the Japs would place their next artillery shots, to be sure we wouldn't be under them—giving her every ounce of gas we could stuff into those six thousand horses, until we were out of range. I think tha Japs were getting tired of us MTB's, and risked exposing that ship to rid themselves of a nuisance."

"Early in February they started sending submarines up from Australia, and our boats would always meet them outside the mine fields and bring them in—Bulkeley getting aboard to ride as pilot. The subs had news. They said America was building a big Australian base—that supplies were rolling down there. The submarine Trout would bring in ammunition for army's 3-inch guns on Bataan and take out gold which had been brought over to Corregidor from Manila before it fell. The unloading, of course, would all be at night, and then Bulkeley would take them out and show them deep water, whera they could submerge and hide from Jap bombers during the day. Quezon went out on one submarine to Cebu, and a week later High Commissioner Sayre left on a submarine. It seemed like a good many prominent people were leaving Corregidor. And the army had been pushed back to what we knew were its last and strongest defense positions on Bataan. None of it looked too good.

"Of our original six boats, two had already been lost, DeLong's over Subic Bay, and the 33 boat while I was in the hospital—she'd been going full speed ahead investigating what looked at night like the feather of a Japanese submarine's periscope, only it turned out to be a wave breaking over a little submerged and uncharted coral reef."

"We came close to losing the 32 boat about that time," said Bulkeley. "DeLong and I were riding her the night of February 8, patrolling up the west coast of Bataan as usual. A little before nine o'clock we saw gun blasts on up ahead of us in the neighborhood of Bagac Bay, so we put on what speed we could to find out who was shooting at what. Incidentally, the speed wasn't much. Because the 32 boat had had an explosion while they were cleaning that saboteur's wax out of her strainers and tanks, so that now she was held together with braces and wires, and running on only two engines. But pretty soon we sighted a ship dead-ahead about three miles away. I was maneuvering to put her in the path of the moonlight on the water so I could make out what she was. But now she seemed to put on speed, heading up in the direction of Subic

"Immediately this Jap officer went to his knees."

Bay—maybe, if she had seen us, to get under the protection of the Jap shore batteries there.

"Why had she been firing near Bagac Bay? We learned that later. She was a 7,000-ton Jap cruiser covering a Jap landing party with her guns. We didn't know we'd broken up this party at the time. Following her, we seemed to be gaining because she had apparently slowed down, maybe thinking she had lost us. We were closing on her fast now, when suddenly a huge big searchlight came on, holding us directly in its beam, and a few seconds later two 6-inch shells came screaming over, landing just ahead of us with a terrific explosion and waterspout. Her searchlight was blinding us and we could only head directly into it, firing the starboard torpedo at that light at about four thousand yards' range. There was another flash of 6-inch guns from the cruiser, and this salvo dropped much closer to us—hardly two hundred yards ahead. A third two-gun salvo landed just astern of us, and then we let her have the port torpedo, figuring the range at a little over three thousand yards.

"Now we were empty, and the problem was to dodge that blinding searchlight. Before we veered off to the east, we tried to douse it with spray of 50-caliber bullets, but they did no good. We could hardly see where our tracers went for the glare. We could see now she was chasing us, firing salvoes in pairs from her four 6-inch guns, when suddenly there was a dull boom, and we could see debris and wreckage sailing up through that searchlight's beam. There was a pause in her firing—no doubt about it, one of our torpedoes had struck home, probably the second one. We knew she was crippled because she had slowed down—that light which was trying to hold us in its glare was getting farther and farther away, and about 10:30 we lost it by making a hard turn to the right. Presently it went out. It came on again once or twica on tha horizon, feeling for us over the waves, but never found us.

"The next day the army told us wa'd broken up a 7,000-ton cruiser's landing party on Bataan near the villaga of Moron, which was then in no-man's land, and said their planes raported the Japs had had to beach her seventy-five miles up the coast. Still later the planes reported the Japs were breaking her up for scrap. But we brought the 32 boat back safe to the base at Sisiman Cove. Our headquarters there was a reformed goat slaughterhouse about one hundred feet long and thirty feet wide, with a concrete floor. We'd scrubbed it out with creosote. It still smelled some, but was habitable. We'd also acquired a tender—an old harbor tug called the Trabajador—and put her in charge of DeLong, who'd lost his ship."

"Then we all sat around envying him," said Kelly, "because here he was, living like an admiral—a cabin, a wardroom, a real galley (not just a hot plate, which was all we had on the MTB's), and even a mess boy who could bake pie. It was big-ship life, and Bulkeley and I used to find some excuse to go every night and eat his dessert and drink coffee. DeLong liked it so much he later decided to stay on Bataan rather than leave with the rest of us.

"Our plan for making a run for China when our gas was almost gone still stood, and Bulkeley had got hold of some landing-force gear which we knew might be useful on the Chinese coast if we missed connections with our Chungking friends and had to fight our way through the Japs. So we began drilling our men in landing-force procedure.

"This got them very curious. They knew our gas was running out, and we had almost no more torpedoes except the ones which were in the boats. So we told them we were thinking of going south to join the Moros if Bataan fell, and it satisfied them for a while. We let only two other persons in on the secret—Clark Lee and Nat Floyd, newspaper correspondents who had been authorized by the Admiral to make the trip with us.

"The food situation was getting tough. Our breakfast was always hot cakes made without eggs—just flour, water, and baking powder—and the syrup was sugar and water. We hadn't seen butter since the war started. Then for dinner, it was always canned salmon and rice, and you don't know tired you can get of canned salmon until you eat it regularly for a few months. We welcomed any change."

"The one high spot in our diet was the Canopus," said Kelly. "She was an old sub tender, so slow she'd been abandoned, but she had a fine machine shop. She was tied up at the dock and already had been hit twice by bombs, so they worked her at night and abandoned her by day. But among her stores were barrels and barrels of ice-cream mix and a freezer. And her skipper would let anyone in the navy who came aboard eat all the ice cream he wanted as long as those barrels lasted—they held out until the week we left.

"But what we wanted most of all was fresh meat and vegetables, and along about the second week in February the first blockade-runner arrived. We piloted her in at night—rendezvous twenty-five miles out—and as daylight came, our mouths watered as we saw her cargo, strings of bananas piled high on her decks, and below, fresh meat and fruit for Corregidor. That afternoon I went over to see Peggy, and they were all busy slicing steaks and candling eggs. By yelling, screaming, and haggling, I got enough fresh meat to serve our crews two meals that week. She was a welcome little ship, that blockade-runner—made two more trips before the Japs sank her.

"But because of Peggy, my diet was a little better than the others. Since she was on Corregidor, she was entitled, under their rationing system, to buy one item per day from the canteen—a package of gum, a candy bar maybe, from the little supply they had left.

"But Peggy pretended she never cared for them, and every time I came to see her, she'd slip me a pocketful. She bought and saved them every day—just something to nibble while I was out on patrol, she explained.

"I began to feel funny about that break-through to China we were planning. Of course the Admiral had ordered it, and of course it was the way we could be most useful. But here were all these brave people on Bataan and the Rock, Peggy among them, realizing more clearly every day that they would never get out. Doomed, but bracing themselves to look fate in the face as it drew nearer, knowing that they were expendable like ammunition, and that it was part of the war plan that they should sell themselves as dearly as possible before they were killed or captured by the Japs. But a handful of us secretly knew that we, and only we among these many brava thousands, would see home again, and soon.

"And the more I liked Peggy—she was a swell kid—the gulltier I felt. Furthermore, I knew if we ever left, it would have to be soon. Gas was getting dangerously low—barely enough to make the run for China. And so was our torpedo supply. We would have to leava with every tube full if we were to throw effective weight against Jap shipping on the China coast, and in addition to what we would need for this, we had only a few torpedoes left, enough for one good fight—and that was to come sooner than we knew."

Star Dust
STAGE-SCREEN-RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

DEANNA DURBIN has succeeded in convincing Hollywood executives, as well as the public, that she's grown up, thanks to radio. She was chosen to play the unhappy, psycho-pathological role created by Teresa Wright in "Shadow of a Doubt" for the Screen Guild Players' air version over CBS. Not only did Deanna come through with flying colors, but the radio program opened an entirely new vista of film and air endeavor for her, one that is completely removed from her singing.

It's not surprising that William Holden wanted to drop his own name—William Franklin Beedle—and legally switch to Holden. But when his wife, Brenda Marshall, has worked so hard and successfully to introduce that one, it's startling to have her announce that she's never liked it, and from now on will be known by her maiden and married names—Ardis Ankerson Holden.

Casting for "Hi Diddle Diddle" sounds a little goofy. Marek Windheim, former Metropolitan Opera tenor, will play a pianist-accompanist for Pola Negri, who makes her motion picture comeback as an opera singer. Seems he was chosen because he, like Miss Negri, is of Polish descent and artistic temperament. Richard Hageman, Metropolitan Opera conductor, plays a stockbroker.

Shirley Temple talked things over with David O. Selznick, and very wisely signed a long term contract with him. She'll appear in "Since You Went Away," his first production since "Rebecca," with an all-star cast.

Some people say that Hollywood had better lay off war pictures because the public's sick of them. Well, the armed forces aren't, judging by the men who come to New York's Civilian Defense Entertainment committee for free tickets. The other night I handed out passes to "Crash Dive" and "China" by the dozen. Of course, "China" had Harry James and his band to back it up.

Bill Terry, who made his film debut in the short, "Private Smith of the U. S. A.," and will soon be seen in its continuation, "Lieutenant Smith," has been signed up by Sol Lesser for a role in "Stage Door Canteen."

Two men of the merchant marine visited Jimmy Dorsey a while back and gave him the "Gibraltar Medal" one of them was wearing. After 36 days after their freighter was torpedoed, all they had to keep their morale up were his recordings of "Maria Elene" and "The Breeze and I." When they'd used up their needles they fell back on matches and paper clips.

Newest screen actor to branch out into radio as a regular performer is Jack Carson, last seen in Warner Bros.' "The Hard Way." He's winning new fame as a comedian as master of ceremonies of the CBS "Comedy Caravan," heard Friday avenings.

Even Ellery Queen, ace detective, failed to notice a wedding ring on the left hand of Ernest Chappell, his program announcer; it was a week before he learned that Chappell had married Claudia Morgan, daughter of Ralph, niece of Frank, "Nora Charles" of "The Thin Man" on the air and leading actress on "The Right to Happiness" and "We Love and Learn."

ODDS AND ENDS—Kate Smith's getting a reputation for having launched more fighting and merchant ships than anyone else in the U. S. A.—she recently launched her sixth . . . Jerry Wayne, singing star of "All Time Hit Parade," acted in minor roles in pictures before turning to radio . . . Rosalind Russell named the baby Carl Lance Brisson . . . Metro's backing the manpower shortage by readying two top budget pictures with all-male casts, "Bataan" and "A Thousand Shall Fall" . . . If Spencer Tracy's really as tired as he looked in "Keeper of the Flame" he's badly in need of a rest . . . Better see "The More the Merrier" for laughs.

'Don't Issue License For She Has My Ring'

McMINNVILLE, ORE.—"Please don't issue a marriage license to a couple from Rainier, Ore.," said the plaintive voice on the phone to the county clerk.

"On what authority?" the clerk queried.

"Well, gosh, mister, I'm the guy she was going to marry. She's got my ring."

Cattle Rustlers Again Are Active

Raiding Herds in Isolated Plains of Wyoming.

CHEYENNE, WYO.—Cattle rustlers, operating in large, speedy trucks, are again raiding herds on the isolated plains of Wyoming and selling the meat at high prices—usually on the black market.

Stockmen's associations in Wyoming and the state Office of Price Administration concur in the belief that the cattle-thief has returned to the West.

Russell Thorp, secretary of the Wyoming Stock Growers association, says there have been reports of more cattle disappearing during recent months than at any time in the past decade. Thorp says one rancher reported 40 head missing.

Inspectors for the association report they are finding a number of the missing cattle at markets across the state. Usually the new "owner" has disappeared and the association sells tha cattle, distributing the funds to the cattlemen's organization.

The OPA reports greatly enlarged "bootleg" selling of meat which had not been inspected, graded or authorized for sale. They believe the meat may well be from the cows stolen by rustlers operating at night on the lonely cattle ranges whera guard protection is virtually impossible.

One OPA spokesman said the rustlers probably were slaughtering the cattle and quartering the carcasses as they rolled along—selling the meat to individual customers and stores who are willing to trade on such a "black market" in ungraded and uninspected beef.

Despite the losses, the bureau of agricultural economics reports that livestock on Wyoming ranches and farms are valued at 19 per cent more than at the same time last year. The total value of all cattle, sheep, hogs, horses and poultry on January 1, 1943, was $113,027,000.

And Wyoming ranchers say they will carry shotguns and high-powered rifles to keep the modern rustlers away from such a rich loot.

Fine Farmer for Wasting Perfect Plowing Weather

MACON, GA. — A Bibb county farmer appeared in Recorder George M. Nottingham's court on charges of drunkenness and was fined $25 for "wasting perfect plowing weather by being drunk."

Ten days ago Recorder Nottingham decided that something ought to be done about the number of absentees from Macon's war industries appearing before his court—so he started a one-man campaign against absenteeism. He installed what he calls his "double-or-nothing" policy. War workers, or others engaged in vital industries are assessed double fines if their escapades occur when they should be at work.

In addition to the farmer, Mr. Nottingham tagged with double fines of $22 aach seven warplant workers charged with drunkenness.

Egg Throwers Find Fun Is Also on Ration List

CHICAGO.—Fun, too, has to be rationed nowadays, Judge N. J. Bonelli has warned.

Four youths were brought before him. They were charged with disorderly conduct and accused of tossing eggs at spectators in a theater. The jurist ordered the two victims of the prank to compute the damage to their clothing, continued the case to the next day, and admonished the defendants' mothers:

"These boys should learn to ration their fun in thesa times. This is a serious offense. Food is not to be wasted."

Visitor to Army Post Is Hurt by Stray Shot

FORT THOMAS, KY. — J. A. Frakes, 69, of Fort Thomas, was shot and wounded seriously by stray pellets when a military police guard opened fire with his shotgun at two soldier prisoners who attempted to escape from Fort Thomas military post.

Frakes was shot in the abdomen as he entered the reservation with his son to visit another son recently inducted into service.

The soldiers, William Evans, 23, and Jack Tucker, 23, received arm wounds. Evans also was struck in the chest.

Police Blotter Looks Like Butcher's Invoice

DENVER, COLO.—Stolen items notes from the police blotter:

"Twenty-five chickens, value $25. Nineteen pigeons, $19. Pair $12.50."

Detective Captain James E. Childers says it has been like that every night since meat rationing.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Considering cost of oil, gas, tires and upkeep, it is estimated that the cost of driving the average car for 1000 miles at 45 miles per hour is $22.03. At 25 mph the cost is cut to $14.38 and at 35 mph it is held to $17.85.

Malaya and the Netherlands Indies were the only sources of natural rubber in the world which had been successfully exploited on an important extent prior to the present war.

Rubber and gas rationing did not drastically cut motor truck operations last year. Official figures show that during 1942 trucks hauled an estimated 48 billion ton miles of freight on main rural highways, compared with 46.7 billion in the more normal 1940.

CHATTERER HAS A FRIGHT

CHATTERER, THE RED SQUIRREL, curled up in the darkest corner of Farmer Brown's corncrib, was having such a beautiful dream. He was king of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows, and all the other little people who lived there brought him presents of beautiful yellow corn. He had great storehouses all filled with corn, and he never again would have to hunt for anything to eat.

Presently he dreamed that he heard a whistle, a merry whistle. It was the whistle of Farmer Brown's Boy, and he could see him coming down the Lone Little Path through the Green Forest with a great bag of corn on his shoulder as a present for the king. The whistle sounded nearer and nearer and nearer. Suddenly Chatterer's eyes flew open. At first he thought he was still dreaming, for he had forgotten where he was. All around him was the beautiful yellow corn, and he still heard the whistle, only now it sounded very loud, indeed. He shut his eyes and then opened them again to see if the corn would disappear. It didn't. It was real. It was all about him.

He started to scramble to his feet to peek out, but just then the door of the corncrib was thrown open with a bang that made Chatterer jump inside, so that it seemed as if his heart came right up into his mouth. A flood of sunshine poured in and made the corn seem more yellow than ever. Then in stepped Farmer Brown's Boy—still whistling. Chatterer thought that, of course, he had come for him. He was sure of it, and he was just going to make a rush for that knothole through which he had crept in when something inside him warned him to keep perfectly still.

"Yes, sir; it certainly is pretty fine corn," said Farmer Brown's Boy.

So Chatterer kept perfectly still, though it seemed to him that it was one of the hardest things he ever had done in all his life. He felt as if he simply must run. Then he remembered how Une' Billy Possum had fooled Farmer Brown's Boy by keeping perfectly still, even after he had been found, so still that Farmer Brown's Boy had thought him dead.

"I couldn't keep still like that," thought Chatterer, "but perhaps Farmer Brown's Boy doesn't know I am here, after all. I'll keep still until he does find me." So he tried to hold his breath, and all the time his heart went thump, thump, thump with fright, and it seemed to him that Farmer Brown's Boy certainly must hear it.

But he didn't. Of course not. He kept right on whistling, and as he whistled he filled a basket with ears of corn. When the basket was full he stepped outside and shut the door with another bang that made poor Chatterer jump again.

"Pretty fine corn. Yes, sir, it certainly is pretty fine corn," said Farmer Brown's Boy to Farmer Brown, who came along just then. "And the rats and the mice can't get at it. It's perfectly safe here," he added. "I've seen that thieving Jay stealing a few grains through the crack, but I guess he is welcome to all he can get that way. No one else can get any, that's sure!"

Chatterer grinned. Then he remembered a little verse his mother had taught him when he was a very little fellow and had been boasting what he knew:

Don't be too sure of anything,
For, smart though you may be,
You're sure to find somebody else
Can beat you up the tree.

Which means, of course, that no matter how smart you may think yourself, someone else is just as smart or a little bit smarter. Here was Farmer Brown's Boy boasting that no one could steal that corn, and here was Chatterer helping himself to all he wanted. Was it any wonder that Chatterer grinned?

What is the most welcome gift you can send to a man in the service? Well, surveys among service men themselves show that one of the favorite packages from home are cigarettes. And first choice among men in all the services is Camel, based on the actual sales records in Post Exchanges and Canteens. Though there are now Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen wherever they are.—Adv.

SOUTHERN FARM MARKET SUMMARY

Southern farmers are busy planting and cultivating growing crops, including cotton, corn, soybeans, peanuts, tobacco, and sweet potatoes. Meanwhile, harvest of truck is in full swing in some areas and continues to progress northward, according to the Food Distribution Administration. Movement of most vegetables was lighter this week on account of unfavorable hauling conditions in many localities, but prices changed little. More watermelons were shipped from Florida; the first car received in New York brought $1000.00 Georgia and South Carolina peaches began to move in carlot quantities. The permit system on potato shipments was extended to 90 addional counties in Florida, Georgia, the Carolinas, and Virginia.

Spring lamb tops at Nashville and Louisville were unchanged at $16.00. Receipts at Nashville were the largest for any week so far this season, as peak movement approached, but the quality took a disappointing dip. Movement is reported about normal in Virginia but under average so far in North Carolina. Hogs turned slightly downward at most southern markets following the trend at Chicago, where prices were depressed by increased marketings. Closing tops were; southeastern soft hog area $14.25, Nashville $13.85, Louisville $14.10, Richmand $13.60, North Carolina and Virginia hog buying stations $13.45-13.75. Cattle markets showed practically no change for the week.

Egg and poultry markets were firm. Fryers have become plentiful but are still bringing ceiling levels of around 28-½c a pound in Atlanta, Raleigh, and Richmond. Egg receipts were light but ample for trade needs with dealers in Atlanta paying 37c a dozen for large White Grade A; Raleigh 38c, Richmond 36c, other Virginia grading stations 34-37c, Jacksonville 41c.

Commercial feedstuffs continued much below requirements throughout the South. Arrivals of feed wheat, however, were again moderate. Pastures have improved considerable. Alfalfa is being harvested in Tennessee, the lower Mississippi Valley area, and southern Virginia. The first new crop Georgia oats arrived in Atlanta and were quoted at 80c a bushel, bulk, in truck lots.

Cotton prices at the 10 designated spot markets advanced to within 4 points of the level at which the CCC is offering to sell, and then dropped back a little. New York July futures closed on May 29 at 20.20c, up 11 points for the week.

Richards Collins of South Main Street has been ill at his home the past week. It is hoped he will soon be able to be out.

A Letter from a Lieutenant to His Sister from "The Wilds of Nowhere, the Land of Death and Destruction."

so strong you can hear it! One of the most stubborn of the men said in the stillness of the night, "Did you hear anything? Sounded like people praying from some distant place. Must be hearing things in this dead place."

So, pray, everyone. It will have to come from afar. No one prays in this land of utter destruction. God has turned away from the horror and destruction man has brought upon himself. Again I plead, tell America to pray. This war will not end until nations and people have paid in blood and tears for thrusting God out of their hearts and countries. An tell them to send Bibles and more Bibles. A Bible gives a soldier confidence that God is with him.

"I'd like to have this letter broadcast over every radio in America. Try to get it on the air and printed in the papers. Make copies of it. Send it from coast to coast. Tell them the army wants prayers and Bibles!

"And you complacene, bridge-playing, cock-tail drinking mothers, why don't you teach your son about God instead of handing him a cigarette and a dance program? Get to your knees and ask God to forgive your sins. And then pray for the Army. Pray, pray, pray! And you preachers! Why didn't you teach the people to pray? Only repentance for sins can stop the shelling, the killing and the murdering.

"I could go on, but I am so tired, so weary. But so happy to see them coming to God, one by one. So tell them to keep on praying. And when you send things to your boys, send Bibles. They want Bibles!

"Your loving brother,
"LIENT . . . . . .

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"Had any news from George and his family since they moved away, Judge?"

"Yes, I had a letter from him day before yesterday. He's in Kentucky...the family's fine and they all like it there. George says he has a fine job in a beverage distillery. He brought out an interesting point in his letter I hadn't thought of before. He said that while the beverage distillers are working 24 hours a day, 7 days a week turning out war alcohol for the government for ammunition, tires, medical supplies and chemicals, they still are able to account for nearly a billion and a half dollars in taxes each year. That's on account of the fact the beverage distillers, though working 100% for the government, are still able to supply the public with beverages from the reserve stocks made during peacetime.

"Quite an unusual case, isn't it, Jim?"

4-H Club Project For Month Of June

The swimming hole has its good points in this early summer weather, but 4-H members must learn to budget their time and not neglect their 4-H projects according to O. D. Perkinson, Assistant County Agent.

Garden

The garden must claim a large amount of our attention just now because the potato bug and the bean bettle and many other insects. The potato bug can be controlled by dusting or spraying with Arsenate of lead and the bean bettle is best controlled by dusting with rotenone.

Cultivate shallow and often and don't attempt to work the ground when it is too wet.

Poultry

Keep the house clean and dry. Keep plenty of water before your chickens at all times. If they are allowed out doors range chickens should have shade. Find the feed and method of feeding which suits your project best. It is best not to change feeds, buy enough feed now to do for several weeks.

Dairy

The mid-summer slump in milk production will come when the grass gets short and the flies are bad. We should start to do what we can to prevent the slump. First feed a small amount of grain now while the grass is good. Supply the cow with plenty of water and shade. A darkened stable where the cow can get away from flies will help. Regular habits of milking is very important in keeping up the milk flow.

Tobacco

Work ground thoroughly before setting plants. Apply five hundred pounds of fertilizer per acre. To apply this amount drill four pounds for each one hundred feet of row. Do shallow cultivation often enough to keep down all weeds. Finish up setting by June 20th. Cultivate as soon as plants are set.

Corn

Be sure you have a good seed bed before planting. Plant only early maturing varieties, hybrid if possible. Do shallow cultivation enough to keep down weeds.

Mrs. Walter L. Day and daughter, Peggy of Omaha, Neb. are spending some time with Mrs. Day's sister, Miss Mazil Falls and her brother, Jimmie Falls of North Main Street. Later she anticipates joining her husband, Major Day in Washington D. C. where they will make their home.

Kentucky Farmers Face Challenge

"Farmers throughout Kentucky and the Nation face the greatest challenge in agricultural history" was the statement made today by M. D. Royse, Chairman of the Kentucky Agricultural Adjustment Agency and USDA War Board.

"Although conditions have not been adequate for farmers to become actively engaged in spring planting, they should make every effort to finish this job when conditions are favorable. No acre of land should be left idle. States not affected by the recent floods of the middle Mississipi basin have an extra job to perform in food production to make up the deficit that will be forthcoming in the areas recently flooded.

"Farmers will be given every assistance possible in the obtainment of labor and machinery by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Although farmers plant up to their farm goals, every effort should be made to surpass this acreage. We should plant with the anticipation that the most favorable weather conditions will exist for harvesting."

Important Notice To Car Owners

Plans to renew motorists' "A" gasoline coupon books by mail under the streamlined renewal plan recently announced by the OPA beginning June 22 have been completed by the Boone County War Price and Rationing Board, R. E. Brugh, Chairman, announced today.

He coupled this announcement with a request that car owners file their applications as soon as possible so that the board may process them and mail out all new books before the persent "A" rations expire July 21.

The mail renewal plan, which also includes renewals of the basic "D" motorcycle rations, eliminates the school-house registration that was necessary when basic rations were issued last autumn. To get his new "A" or "D" books a car or motorcycle owner needs take only the following simple steps:

1. Pick up an application form at any of the following service stations or places: All Service Stations or your Local Bank. The forms will be available at these places beginning June22.

2. Fill out the form and mail it to the War Price and Rationing Board together with (a) the back cover of the present "A" or "D" book (properly filled out), and (b) the current tire inspection record showing? that proper inspections have been made.

"With volunteer help now being enlisted the board will begin processing the applications as soon as they start coming in," R. E. Brugh said. "New ration books will be mailed back as soon as they are ready. Every effort will be made to have new books in the hands of all car and motorcycle owners by July 21, when their present book expire. But this can be assured only if motorist and motorcycle owners cooperate by getting their application forms as soon as possible and filling them promptly. possible and filing them promptly.

The new application forms, like those used last year, will have a tire inspection record attached, R. E. Brugh pointed out. In filling out the form, applicants should make sure that their tire serial numbers are accurately written in. These numbers may be copied from old tire record, as corrected at the time of the last inspection, unless the applicant has acquired a new tire since then. In this case, he should write in the new tire number and attach a note explaining this to the board.

The back cover of the persent ration book is required as part of the application because it is evidence that the owner held a properly issued ration and is entitled to a renewal, the chairman explained.

Any mtorist who have not had at least one tire inspection by a qualified inspector will be denied a renewal.

Florence Service Board Unveiled

The unveiling of the Service Board at Florence, Ky. Sunday afternon at 3 P. M. was somewhat marred by the heavy rain which fell at that time and prevented the carrying out in its entirety of the excellent program which the committee from the local P.-T. A. had arranged.

The Board is located in the beautiful yard of Mrs. Virginia Goodridge, who graciously granted the space for it between two trees and close to the pavement where it shows up well. The upper part of the Board is ornamented with three eagles, a large one in the center and smaller ones at each corner and the decoration and lettering were done by Mrs. Kathleen Loftin, whose husband, William Loftin, made the Board. It contains the names of 123 men and boys from Florence Precinct. The program began with music by the bands from Burlington, and Florence schools, under the able direction of Noel Walton of Burlington. They were sheltered on Mrs. L. P. Aylor's porch, across the street from the Board. Then followed the impressive invocation by Rev. Robert Carter, pastor of the Christian Church. The Community singing which was to have come next was postponed till later in hopes the rain would slacken, which it did not. The speaker of the afternoon, our new County Judge, C. L. Cropper was introduced by Mr. A. M. Yealey who for so many years was principal of our school. Judge Cropper ,a veteran of World War I, spoke of our pride in our boys who are serving our Country so well and his address was appropriate and thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Then the unveiling was accomplished by four little children, Donald V. Markesberry in the uniform of a Marine, Shirley Howard in the uniform of a Red Cross Nurse, Lila Lee Oliver in the uniform of a W. A. A. C. and Dickie Wilson in the uniform of an Army Officer. By this time the rain was pouring down and the program was closed with the Benediction by Rev. Harold Wainscott, pastor of the Baptist Church.

We have three boys who are on the deferred list so that they may finish their education to be of more use to Uncle Sam; George Robert Tanner and Thomas Lutes who are studing medicine, and Marvin Lutes who is studing Dentistry. Just as soon as they finish and are in uniform, their names will be added to the list on the Board, as well as any boys who may be inducted later. The Committee hopes they have not missed anyone but, if they have, will be glad to be notified to that affect.

Mr. Howard Hudson and Mrs. Nellie Wilson Webster were united in marriage Wednesday, June 2nd at the home of Mr .and Mrs. A. T. Hunt in Verona, by Rev. A. K. Johnson. They will make their home in Crittenden.

Farm Labor Most Difficult Problem

Farm labor today remains the most difficult problem in food and feed production in the county according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

A survey of the food and feed situation in the county was started this past week through neighborhood leaders and farm machinery custom operators. A large number of the survey reports received at the county office to date indicates the following outstanding points.

1. An outstanding wholesome spirit of cooperation between farmers exists. Every report received indicates the farmers are 100% patriotic in their outlook.

2. Farm machinery owners are willing to do csutom work for neighbors provided suitable help to operate the machinery can be secured. Many have expressed a desire to trade. Work done with machinery for return labor in crops. Others will operate at a reasonable charge. A few operators who have help are plowing, discing and preparing land for planting on a twenty four hour basis.

3. Many farmers need help to harvest hay this week. The securing of some of this needed help seems practically impossible. Six thousand farm people and four thousand non-farm people can solve this problem more quickly and better than any one man or agency. Feed crops will be the bottle neck in food production next winter. Let's help keep Boone County out of this bottle neck by cooperating, planning, working and sweating to save every pound of needed hay and grain crops. Lend a hand to your neighbor in need. Let's hope he returns the favor.

4. Despite the weather and the late season, prospects for food and feed production in Boone County are good provided full plantings can be made and the crops can be harvested.

The county labor program can be of only limited assistance at the best. However, all farmers who have difficulties with labor problems that cannot be solved locally should immediately notify the county agent's office in Burlington. Because it usually takes a few days before suitable help can be located, all requests should be made as far in advance of the time needed as possible.

NOTICE

WALTON SCHOOL CHILDREN

Those wishing to take their second diptheria toxiod should report at Dr. Mann's Office on June 15-16 and 17 at the regular office hours.

It is very important that the children take the second dose to establish immunity.

DR. H. F. MANN.

Farmers Assisted Securing Help

Several farmers were assisted in securing labor assistance the past week according to Rev. Will Smith County Farm Labor Assistant.

Several other farmers are badly in need of full time help and a much larger number are in need of day help.

Dr. O. E. Senour needs a full time man to assist in milking and doing general farm work on his farm located on the Frogtown Roard. House, garden, etc. will be furnished.

Charles Black in East Bend bottoms needs a full time helper to do general farm work. Board will be furnished.

Twenty-three farmers have requested help in shearing seven-hundred and eighty-eight sheep. Commercial shearers are cooperating in getting this work done.

A survey of available power machinery is being completed. A number of operators have agreed to cooperate in getting plowing, discing, planting and mowing work done.

Farmers are urged to solve their problems locally where possible. Where this is not possible call the county agent's office, phone Burlington 412, or write the county office. Give details that will enable the labor assistant to locate the type of service to be filled.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Hardest Fighting Still to Come: Byrnes; Chinese Forces Rout Foe on Yangtze As Japs Drive Toward War Capital; Allied Airmen Pound Italian Objectives

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

BYRNES:
Reports to Nation

The 100,000th war plane rolled off the assembly line as the newly appointed War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes spoke to the nation.

"We have at length caught up with the Axis in our preparations and are forging rapidly ahead," he said. "We have a long, hard road ahead. The hardest fighting is yet to come. Now we must not only keep up our production but we must assume a major part in the all-out military operations of the enemy."

Recounting America's tremendous production achievements, Byrnes revealed that the U. S. turned out 100 fighting ships in the first five months this year; more than 1,000 cargo vessels were built during the 12 months ending May 31; 100,000 pieces of anti-aircraft cannon have been produced and 1,500,000 machine guns and submachine guns manufactured.

By April 1, Byrnes said, the U. S. will have spent 10 billion dollars in buying land and building camps and air fields in this country. Referring to his new position, he declared that he would seek to bring unity among the government agencies entrusted with carrying out the war programs, saying their teamwork was as necessary as that of the soldiers.

MANPOWER:
To Cut Deferments

Only 1½ million men will be deferred in industry by the end of this year, Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower commission, declared.

During the year, McNutt said, 6,000,000 physically fit men, including fathers, will form the pool from which 2,700,000 must be inducted to round out the goal of 11,000,000 for the armed services.

Of the number, McNutt continued, 900,000 will be deferred for farm work, 900,000 will be exempted for dependency, and 1,500,000 will be deferred for industrial work.

McNutt urged employers to prepare for replacement of the 3 million men now deferred in industry, including fathers, whose general induction around August 1 recently was predicted by Selective Service Director Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey.

FARM SUPPLY:
Simple Priority Needed

By merely filling out a form drawn up by himself or his retailer, a farmer will be able to obtain priorities on 176 types of supplies. Individual purchases, however, will be limited to $25.

The form must simply read: "I certify to the War Production board that I am a farmer and that the supplies covered by this order are needed now and will be used for the operation of a farm."

To facilitate its ruling, the WPB ordered manufacturers to get the supplies into retailers' hands. Among the scarce items are batteries, chains, cold chisels, pitchforks, hoes, harness leather, galvanized pails, pipes, horsecollars, pliers, ropes, shovels, barbed wire and bale wire, wrenches, tuba and poultry netting.

WPB also is seeking to speed up output of axes, boxes, feedtroughs, egg cases, sprayers, hand cultivators, milk pails, wagon hardware and plowshares.

CHINA:
Rout Japs

Five Japanese divisions of 75,000 men were routed as Chinese troops counterattacked along the Yangtze river. Even as the enemy was thrown back, American bombers and Chinese fighters swooped on the Jap air base of Ichang, and 10 tons of explosives were dropped.

The Jap rout came after they had thrust south toward the Yangtze in their drive to the Chinese provisional capital of Chungking, 295 miles to the east. According to the Allied communique, the Chinese armies developed an encircling movement, cut off the Japanese line of retreat, and then chopped up the entrapped units.

Besides raiding Ichang, Allied airmen were active over other sectors of China. Jap warehouses and railroad yards were blasted at Foochow.

GOP:
Post-War Committee

So that the next Republican national convention might have the basis for drawing up an appropriate platform dealing with the part America should play in the post-war world's reconstruction, 49 prominent members of the GOP were named to serve on a special committee to study the question.

Announced by National Chairman Harrison Spangler, the committee consists of 5 senators, 12 congressmen, 24 governors and 8 party officials.

According to Spangler, it will be the duty of the committee to chart a program embracing the extent to which this country should commit itself toward co-operating in maintaining world peace. Of equal importance, Spangler said, will be the committee's task of mapping a course for our own domestic reconstruction.

"We must plan for a free and prosperous agriculture; labor conditions which will insure labor its just share; and conditions which will permit industry to expand, grow, develop and produce the things which will add to our standard of living," Spangler declared.

ITALY:
Softened Up

Harbors, shipping and airdromes were left in flames as Allied airmen flew in from the east and west and pounded both ends of Italy.

Heavily hit were the port facilities of Naples, on Italy's western shoreline. To the east, the air base at Foggia was raided, with grounded planes, a gasoline dump and barracks offering the target.

In all, 150 Flying Fortresses and Liberators participated in the assaults. Despite the fact that fierce fighter opposition was encountered over Naples, the Allies reported no losses.

Meanwhile, other units of the North African air force continued to pound Sardinia, which sprawls in the Tyrrhenian sea west of Italy, and Pantelleria, the tiny island south of Sicily, where the Axis has developed underground hangars.

The Allies announced the loss of but one Lightning in these raids. Although admitting heavy damage from Allied raids, the Italians claimed to have shot down 57 British and American bombers over Pantelleria since May 1.

RUSSIA:
Nazis Claim Strength

Claiming that waves of dive-bombers and fighter planes had leveled the Russian base of Krimskaya and extended operations beyond in the Caucasus, the Nazis boasted of re-establishing their air superiority over their embattled bridgehead at Novorossisk.

Even so, Russian pressure continued against the Nazis' only foothold in the Caucasus, with the Reds developing another threat to Novorossisk by landing troops on the shores of the Taman peninsula to the Germans' rear.

Minor action flared on other sections of the Russian front. South of Leningrad, the Reds reported destroying a network of pill-boxes and dugouts, while shooting up a freight train. Before Smolensk, artillery fire was said to have wiped out two enemy companies.

COAL STRIKE:
Labor Crisis

America's wartime labor situation moved toward a crisis with the walkout of approximately 450,000 miners after a 30-day truce had failed to end in a new contract. Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, nominally the operator of the mines after the government had taken them over during the first strike threat, flayed both sides for the disruption of work.

As a basis for compromise, the UMW had suggested a settlement of the entire wage question by payment of $1.50 per day as a solution of the portal-to-portal question, or compensation for the time miners spend traveling to and from their coal faces above and underground. The $1.50 payment would be temporary until a mixed committee had worked out a final settlement of the issue.

The operators proposed portal-to-portal pay of 80 cents a day as a basis for discussion. The bone of contention entered into the issue of payment of overtime for 35 hours, which was a condition of the miners' last contract.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO:
At Long Last

The house took the first step in the passage of its conference committee's pay-as-you-go legislation.

One hundred and sixty-seven Republicans joined with 89 Democrats in approving the bill, which forgives all of one year's taxes of $50 and allows for a reduction of 75 per cent on the remainder over $50.

The legislation also provides for a 20 per cent tax, after exemptions on all salaries or wages. Persons obtaining incomes from other sources, like farmers, must estimate their yearly earnings and then pay off the liability on a quarterly basis.

Persons who are left with a 25 per cent tax after the 75 per cent forgiveness must pay off the remainder in two annual installments, due in 1944 and 1945. In all, the government hopes to recapture three billion dollars under the proposed bill.

CANNED MILK:
One Red Point

With canned milk production off 25 per cent from last year's output of 75 million cans, and with the government purchasing half of the supply, the Office of Price Administration placed condensed and evaporated milk on the rationed list.

Under the regulations, 14½ ounce cans, or several cans totaling 14 ounces or less, now are worth one red point. The 14½ ounce can is the size popularly bought for infants, and the payment of one red point from their ration book, of course, will not be felt as severely as by adults, whose purchase will reduce their quota of stamps for meat, cheese and fats.

Officials estimate that the average adult needs three or four pounds—three or four points worth—of canned milk a week, if fresh milk isn't used.

ATTU:
Kiska Next?

Facing the west, Japanese soldiers bowed in hallowed respect of their emperor, then with a wild cry launched a final, suicidal counterattack against American troops on Attu island.

Mowed down by American fire, the attack collapsed, and the last organized enemy resistance on this westernmost of the Aleutian islands came to an end, some 20 days after the first American troops stole ashore under the protective cover of U. S. naval units.

Conquest of Attu turned eyes to Kiska, main Jap base in the Aleutians, isolated by the U. S. victory. Operating from Amchitka, American airmen continued to hammer the Japanese airplane, harbor and camp installations at the base. Approximately 10,000 enemy troops are supposed to be stationed on Kiska.

FRENCH:

Interned and disarmed at Alexandria, Egypt, since June of 1940, nine French warships will be returned to service in the Allied ranks within six months.

Among the vessels are the 22,000-ton battleship Lorraine, with eight 13.4-inch guns; the 10,000-ton heavy cruisers Duquesne, Tourville and Suffren, with eight 8-inch guns; the 7,249-ton cruiser Trouin, with eight 6.1-inch guns; three destroyers with four 4.1-inch guns, and the 1,384-ton submarine, Protee.

MORE CANNED GOODS

Housewives who will get more canned goods this summer can thank the senate's Truman committee. No one announced it officially, but it was due to their probing that the army recently released 30 million cases of canned fruits and vegetables for civilian use.

The Truman committee had revealed the fact that huge quantities of canned goods were being hoarded or unwisely used by the army, when fresh vegetables were easily available. Especially revealing was the cross-examination of Gen. E. B. Gregory, the army's quartermaster general, by Senator Brewster of Maine.

"Why does the army feed canned grapefruit to its troops in Miami," asked Brewster, "when grapefruit is growing fresh all over Florida?"

"Because the men are too lazy to prepare fresh grapefruit," was General Gregory's frank reply.

He also admitted that green vegetables and fruits were readily available to army camps during a large part of the year, but that army commissaries purchased canned goods because it was easier to prepare than fresh vegetables.

The Truman committee also found that as a result of this hoarding the packers and canners were in a quandary and expected to curtail production. They knew the army had overpurchased, could never use its vast stores of canned goods. So the canners figured the army would dump this back on the market, thereby causing an oversupply just at the wrong time. That was why 30 million cases were turned back to civilian use by the army now, to ease the market while there is a civilian shortage.

WHITE COLLAR MINERS

While the War Labor board had John L. Lewis over a barrel for asking a $2-a-day wage increase for organized coal miners, another branch of the government, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, okayed various salary increases for non-union supervisory employees in coal mines.

The matter was kept hushed up by secret-loving Internal Revenue bureaucrats, but here are the facts:

A special Internal Revenue branch, known as the Salary Stabilization unit, functions in the salary field like the War Labor board in the wage field, to keep personal earnings below inflationary levels. The new unit must approve applications for all salary boosts affecting business executives and white collar workers.

While everything the War Labor board does is open to public scrutiny, Internal Revenue's Salary Stabilization unit operates strictly behind the scenes and doesn't answer to anybody.

Recently, it leaked out, however, that bituminous coal mine operators, in a move to block union organization of mine "sub-bosses," had requested government permission to increase salaries of all supervisory employees, including mine superintendents, managers, foremen, sub-bosses, etc. That white-collar increase amounted to an average of $2 a day—just the increase the miners asked for.

GRAIN FROM CANADA

Food Boss Chester Davis has spent days looking for a good transportation man to solve that problem of bringing in wheat from Canada.

Commodity Credit corporation has bought 7½ million bushels of Canadian wheat, but not a bushel has moved. Meantime, dairy and poultry farmers in the Northeast are running low on feed grains.

Great Lakes steamers got moving a month late, on account of the late thaw. They are loaded down with ore for the steel mills, have no space for grain. Rail movement is the only alternative.

Grain stocks in the U. S. have been the heaviest in history, but so is consumption of grain. Record-breaking animal production is eating into the stocks so fast that foreign imports must be moved. This is one time when farmers would welcome some of that much abused Argentine corn and wheat.

Behind this excitement about grain supplies is one big question mark which few people outside the government realize, namely, the feeding of occupied territories.

If and when invasion comes, the civilians on the invasion front, whether in France, the Low Countries, or the Balkans, will have to be fed from the American bread basket. Quickest way to get food to starving people is in the form of grain.

Army's Greatest Hazard? It's Question of Morale

Armed Services Do Everything Possible to Protect Mental Health of Servicemen; Parents Advised to Cooperate.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

What's the greatest hazard your boy must meet when he joins the army? Not the weapon of the enemy. We know only a very tiny percentage of those who don the uniform succumb to that.

It's the mental hazard.

Take it from a man who met it and who, since, has read the alarming figures which show the war's (my war's) mental casualties.

And to meet that mental hazard you need just one thing—mental health.

Let me quote a few words on the subject of morale from one of the books which the army and the navy and the wise ones in other professions say is a wonderful protection for the mental health of the boy who joins the army.

That book is paper bound. It costs 35 cents. It is called "Our Armed Forces." It has a lot of pictures in it and a lot of sound sense. It is printed by the presses of the Infantry Journal, 1115 17th street, Washington, D. C. It is not sold for profit.

And here is what it says on the subject of morale. (As I say on the air, "I'm quoting"):

"Morale is an important quality of citizenship in the crises of peace, when the internal security of the nation is threatened. It is even more important in war, when the very existence of the nation hangs in the balance. It is, therefore, an objective of army and navy leadership to build a high degree of morale in the soldier and sailor.

About Habits

"The state of mind we call morale has its roots in long-established habits of thinking and acting. A student seated alone in his room, bent seriously over his books, may be tackling his studies with a high degree of morale. He believes what he is doing is worth while. He is determined to overcome whatever difficulties the subject matter offers. He works with a self urge. He gives up the picture show and the hall game if doing so is necessary for success. He has confidence in his ability to acquire the knowledge and skill he is seeking. In the undertaking of hundreds of similar duties in the ordinary routine of living is created the intangible virtue called morale. The young man who enters the armed services may therefore bring with him the basis for the morale upon which his success as a soldier and the ultimate victory of our nation so greatly depend.

"While morale has its roots in the character of the individual and his past experience, it may be greatly strengthened by association and close co-operation with others who are engaged in the same enterprise. Morale is contagious. It is a quality easily transmitted from one person to another. The serviceman receives his uniform. It is the symbol of his dedication. With it he becomes part of the great tradition. Behind him into history is a long line of those who have been so dedicated. The men who walked barefoot in the snow at Valley Forge. The Green Mountain boys with Ethan Allen, thundering at the gates of Ticonderoga. Calm men in the gun turrets at Manila Bay. Marines at Guadalcanal . . . Chateau Thierry . . . Tripoli. Helmeted fliers of a torpedo squadron at Midway. Through the procession of heroes, still bright as it recedes into distant time, has been handed down the great tradition."

Environment

Now when Johnny Doughboy joins up, he changes his habits of life as much as Christopher Columbus would have to change his if he came back and took a job managing a big, modern corporation, or riding herd on a bunch of long-horns or bossing a section gang. It would be tough for Chris to adapt himself to his environment. If he couldn't manage it, he would probably go haywire and blow his top. The dinosaur and some of his fellow prehistorics who couldn't adjust themselves to their environment retired permanently to positions in museums. Man, some men that is, adjusted. They took the ice age, the floods and the famine in their stride and here they are oh-ing and ah-ing at the dead mastodons who weren't as smart at "fitting in"—that's all morale is, "fitting in," getting on when you, who have sat down to your meals three times a day as regularly as the clock, miss the chow wagon; you who have had a kind and solicitous mother or teacher looking after your private troubles are suddenly faced with sharing the troubles of your squad or company or squadron.

Now, how are you going to adjust yourself to this sudden change?

In the first place, you have to understand why everything seems topsy-turvy. Why you, a free-born American citizen, who did as he pleased when and how it pleased him, suddenly have to get up by a bugle, keep step, salute, eat, sleep, drink, walk, run, crawl when somebody else says so.

The first thing you have to realize is the purpose ahead. The next thing is why other people whom you never see insist on achieving that purpose the way they do, regardless of your convenience or your date at the post office.

Your Own Orders

"Your government controls the armed forces." That means that the men your folks elected, just the way it was planned by the makers of America, are really the ones who are telling you what to do. Which means, if you follow through, that you yourself and your folks are telling you.

I chose that phrase because it heads chapter two in this book "Our Armed Forces" I'm talking about. You had better read it.

The next chapter is called "Your Army." And you had better read that too because it tells you something of what to expect. I won't go any further and really I ought to have been talking all this time to parents, too, for they, of all people, ought to know what the boy is up against. What it is all about. One of the great tragedies of being a soldier is the way the folks back home don't understand it at all. They think their job is to feel sorry for you; they don't understand what an extra stripe really means, they can't get you when you talk about home and the things you want to hear about and they write and tell you how noble you are. You don't feel noble. You want to know if the barn has been painted or if your girl has been around lately. You would, though, like them to have some faint idea about this not-altogether unpleasant job of being a soldier. That's why it would be a good thing if your folks would read this book.

Broadcaster's Diary

As I came to work this morning—a little late and right in the midst of the crowds of war workers surging down to their offices, I was suddenly struck with the fact that this change in Washington which I have become used to is typical of other changes that are going to take place all over America.

I was walking down 16th street. That sounds prosaic but it used to be a street of beautiful mansions, many of them historic. It sweeps out of the Maryland countryside, down a hill and up another crest from which you can look down, through a vista of ancient trees to the blur at the end which is the White House with the statue of General Jackson on his rearing horse silhouetted against it.

This morning, as I say, the workers were swarming out of the houses—they are boarding houses now—to work. I glanced up as I passed one sedate old home, the wistaria still decorously draped over the doorway up whose curving drive once the carriage and later the limousine swept to meet milady descending.

I peeped, indecorously, through the beautiful leaded windows of the dining room. It was filled with little tables, the cloths stained with precious but too hurriedly imbibed morning coffee.

I thought a moment. How will Delaware avenue and Locust street and High street look after the war? Those neatly cropped lawns, even an iron deer or two if they haven't gone into the scrap collection campaign?

Sic transit gloria—but perhaps the past glory will be replaced by something more glorious. We can hope.

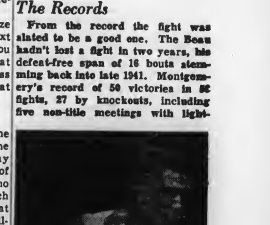
SPEAKING of SPORTS

By Bob Mc Shane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.



THE much-debated question—just how good a fighter is Beau Jack?—was answered quite specifically when the lightweight champion lost to Bob Montgomery, rangy Philadelphia Negro, before a capacity crowd in Madison Square Garden.

The fight definitely will not rank as one of ringdom's great spectacles. Certain vulgar people were heard to make snide remarks concerning the caliber of present lightweight boxers. But both boys gave all they had. Both were game, courageous and willing to take a chance. But fighters like Barney Ross, Tony Canzoneri, Henry Armstrong and Lou Ambers could have whipped either man with a minimum of difficulty.

Beau Jack was 3-1 in the ringside betting, after closing in the afternoon marts at 2-1. From that angle it was the biggest boxing upset of the year. The decision of Referee Arthur Donovan and the two judges was unanimous, none of them giving Montgomery less than nine rounds. One press association scored 11 for Montgomery, three for Jack and one even.

The Records

From the record the fight was slated to be a good one. The Beau hadn't lost a fight in two years, his defeat-free span of 16 bouts stemming back into late 1941. Montgomery's record of 50 victories in 52 fights, 27 by knockouts, including five non-title meetings with lightweight champions, (three times with Sammy Angott and twice with Lew Jenkins) was extremely flattering. But the boys couldn't hurl statistics at each other.

From the spectators' viewpoint, the fight at least was an active affair. Both men kept flailing away. Beau Jack started his usual routine of left-hand jabs, often landing six or seven without being stopped. But he carried a fly swatter instead of a post maul. And the Beau tired quickly. Neither man ever had fought a 15-round battle before, but it was Montgomery who proved to have the greatest reserve. And that wasn't the most surprising thing in the world.

Even in his 12-round engagements Jack had shown a tendency to weaken before the close. It is obvious that no athlete can retain his original drive through a dozen rounds of hard going. But Jack has the habit of running down suddenly. He doesn't lack courage, but his stamina gives out.

Drawing Power

Regardless of his staying power, Beau Jack has even more important drawing power. In his last four fights he has pulled in about a third of a million dollars. His two fights with Fritzie Zivic—in February and March—brought in a little over $70,000 each. The gate for the Henry Armstrong match on April 2 was $105,000, and the Jack-Montgomery bout brought in $85,000.

The defeat certainly did not bolster Jack's stock, but the colored boy from Georgia will be given a return bout for the title. The fight contract contained the all-important provision.

Boxing as a whole is not very well off. Perhaps the main reason for the lack of national interest is that very few people know who the various champions are. Seemingly they don't care.

Not so long ago any fight involving the lightweight championship would be a top sports event. These matches ranked second only to heavyweight title bouts.

But today the individual who can name the champion and a couple of strong title contenders in any weight classification is a very well read individual.

The Reasons

The lack of good fighters is one of the reasons. But too much emphasis has been placed on that aspect. The various boxing commissions—state and national—deserve much of the blame. They can't seem to agree on title holders. Whenever the favorite son of one particular commission doesn't get every possible break the members of said commission virtually sever relations with other similar organizations. Mediation doesn't seem to be even a last resort.

"Bitsy" laid a seven-ounce egg which measured 7½ inches around the center and 9¼ inches the other way.

Nazi Camp Fails To Crush Spirit

Woman, 100, Held 2 Years In Filthy Prison.

NEW YORK.—A woman 100 years old has the answer to Nazi toughness—be tougher. Mrs. Mathilde Wertheimer survived 22 months in the filth and horror that is one of the deadliest concentration camps in Europe—Gurs in the Pyrenees. The years of her life, 97 to 99, she will remember there.

"When she first came here last July she begged for a slice of bread that she could break up herself," explained her daughter, Mrs. Berthe Schwab, with whom she lives. "In the camp they gave her such a small piece."

She is a tiny woman with a large sense of humor.

She speaks no English. But her eyes speak for her. They twinkle and look just a bit exasperated when conversation is conducted in English and she cannot understand. She watches odd words and phrases. Her daughter said she immediately picked up the oft-repeated "I don't like it" and demanded to know what it means.

One can understand how she withstood Nazi-imposed hardships. She never wants to go to bed before midnight. She refuses to use the wheelchair her son-in-law bought for her. She walks, instead, along the Hudson or goes window-shopping.

Mrs. Wertheimer, who lost her husband 20 years ago, arrived here with two daughters, Rose and Sophie, who also had been confined to the camp, by way of Casablanca.

Dog Digs Up Body of Man Missing for Months

CALICO ROCK, ARK. — A dog scratching in the dirt led to discovery of the body of a 43-year-old missing World war veteran and to murder charges against his wife and 21-year-old red-haired stepdaughter, Deputy Prosecutor R. D. Harris reported.

The body of Charles Durant was taken from a shallow grave in the backyard of his home here after the dog's digging had unearthed a human hand. Durant had been missing since last December 1, Sheriff J. A. Rodman announced.

Harris said he filed first-degree murder charges against the man's wife, Mrs. Armanda Rose Durant, and against her daughter, Mary, whose whereabouts officer said they did not know. Police at Romeo, Mich., arrested Mrs. Durant.

Rodman went to Little Rock to investigate records of Durant with the Veterans administration, reporting that the administration, after December 1, received two hand-printed letters signed with Durant's name asking that his compensation be discontinued because he had obtained employment.

A coroner's jury reported Durant's death was due to violence after testimony at an autopsy said a pistol bullet was found in his head.

How It Turned Out for Mother of Yank Soldier

KANSAS CITY.—Four times Mrs. S. L. Wilsen went to a theater to see her son in a Guadalcanal newsreel.

Four times she fainted just before he appeared on the screen.

She tried a fifth theater last night, "and this time my heart went to my throat—but stopped there," she said. "I saw him."

On the first four tries, "things just seemed to go black before Melven Lee appeared."

How long was her 17-year-old boy on the screen?

"Oh, it seemed like about one 65th of a second. They were marching up a gangplank into a ship. He smiled into the camera just like he used to smile at home.

"He stopped and rubbed the end of his rifle—the handle, or whatever you call it."

Her voice still tremulous with excitement, she said she had felt "sort of silly," waiting for her fifth attempt to view the newsreel.

Will she see it again, now that she's cured?

"I'm going to see it every time it's run in Kansas City."

Cute Clothes for Youngsters Made of Men's Cast-Off Shirts

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WHEN dad's or brother's shirts are "all gone" at the collar and cuffs, don't deposit them in the bag with future dust rags. These days it's a patriotic duty to conserve every piece of fabric that can be reclaimed for active wear. You'll find you can transform these shirts into rompers, dresses, sun-suits, shirts and pinafores for the young members of the family just by getting busy at the family sewing machine and starting to stitch away.

Men's shirts, as a rule, are made of fine sturdy broadcloth and madras fabrics in stripes, line checks and other interesting weaves that make them perfect for children's clothes. So whether you plan to convert the shirt into a shirt or rompers for your young son or a sunsuit and bonnet for your young daughter, here are some general steps to remember.

Cut the shirt apart along the seams. Remove the collar and yoke. Leave the buttons and buttonholes intact, you may be able to use them in recutting for the back closing on a little dress or the front closing on a boy's shirt. Ba sure to launder all the pieces and press flat to make pattern placing, pinning and cutting easier and more accurate. Fold the back section down the center and match up the fronts and sleeves so that the fabric design and grain all go the same way. It doesn't matter what type of garment you make, the next step is to lay out the pattern on the fabric.

Pin the pattern carefully to the material, then pink all the fabric edges with the pinker attachment in your sewing machine kit. This will dispose of the more involved task of making French seams, because once the fabric has a pinked edge simple seams are all that is necessary. When using a pattern that calls for buttons and buttonholes, down the front or back, place the pattern so that the center line of the button and buttonhole markings on the pattern fall on the center line of those already on the shirt. Additional buttonholes can be made in a jiffy with the buttonhole attachment. Remember, too, that girls' clothes button from right to left, boys' from left to right. Just the opposite is true if the garment has a back closing. It is important to mark all the pattern notches on the fabric to insure precise points of joining. The final step is stitching.

Glamorize each costume with such clever trimming tricks as lattice work effects and medallions which you can stitch up in practically no time by using the unerring little handicraft attachment to your sewing machine with which rickrack braid (rickrack is lavished on dresses and pinafores this season) is attached in unique and ornamental ways. Cutout monograms to adorn tiny pockets can be made of scraps of material and are jiffy-stitched with the aid of the zig-zagger attachment. If you would like to dramatize your daughter's writing ability have her write her name on the collar of her dress, then with the one-thread embroiderer you can follow her lettering with a signature stitch.

A man's worn shirt of beige-striped madras was used to make the enchanting little sunsuit and sunbonnet for the two-year-old miss seated so gleefully centered in the picture. In the one-piece dress to the right there's a Peter Pan simplicity that's very practical. It's made from a man's pin-stripe shirt. The cost to remake was about ten cents for navy blue binding stitched on quickly with the binder attachment to enhance the edge of collar, sleeves and pockets. Pinafores as seen in the little sketches are the big news in little folk's fashion circles. Men's striped shirts make unusually attractive pinafores for children when you use the stripes vertically for the garment and horizontally for pockets, waistline band and pleated edging. Add to this the professional details of appliqua hearts (see sketch lower left corner) that can be applied quickly with the zigzagger attachment and you have a pinafore that looks brand new and expensive.

By dropping in at a local sewing center even a completely uninitiated beginner can learn to stitch up a variety of attractive outfits from closet castoffs. In just a few afternoons via wartime budget lessons you can master all the modern sewing short-cuts as well as shirt-reviver tricks.

Gay Play Suit

Vividly colorful cotton prints is the big style message for play suits this summer. Strikingly gay red cotton patterned all over with print motif of black and white bows is used for the intriguing suit pictured. As practical as it is colorful this suit is a three-piece, the full skirt being worn over brief shorts. The little bodice is designed for midriff exposure to health-giving sun rays.

Patchwork Fashions

A new craze in the fashion world is that of patchwork blouses, hats, pinafores and a whole list of novelties made of pieces of calicoes, ginghams and so on that are patched together. It is said that a thriving business is being done at the remnant counters for the idea is one that is appealing to young enthusiasts that delight in following fads.

Picture if you will slacks that are cuffed with little swatches of bright calico or chambray or gingham that have been patched together exactly as grandma worked her quilt schemes. Top these knee-length slacks with a blouse made of the sama patchwork. You can make entire aprons of this patchwork or add pockets to your plain chambray play dress. Fact is "anything goes" in this new patchwork stampede.

New Skirt Type

Designers are turning time and talent to creating versatile skirt fashions to wear with the exquisite lingerie blouses so fashionable this summer. A charming new style to be found in the stores suggests the dirndl trend. Being made of silk jersey it carries grace itself accented with such cunning details as little ruffles of the jersey outlining huge bow-tied pockets with a matching ruffle encircling the skirt but placed a full eight inches above the hemline. You'll love this skirt, it goes so effectively with any type blouse and it is to be had in delectable monotones.

CANCER DELAY

Just as we are congratulating ourselves that knowledge of cancer was making great headway not only in America but throughout the world, it comes as a shock that cancer authorities state that "the public education on the cancer problem is inadequate and ineffective." We have naturally been thinking that as more people now live to the cancer age, this is the cause of the increase of cancer, which is true to a great extent. However, that more could and should be done, in fact is absolutely necessary, if we are to reduce the cancer death rate, is more knowledge of cancer. Thus the slogan "Fight Cancer with Knowledge" is timely.

Dr. Barton

That knowledge of cancer is greatly needed is the statement in the Journal of the American Medical Association, by Drs. Charles R. Harms, Jules A. Plant and Ashley W. Cughterson, New Haven, Conn.

In the study of the causes of delay in obtaining treatment by 155 patients, it was found that only about one-fourth of the patients had read about cancer and that all but two of these had obtained their information from newspapers and popular magazines. Only two admitted reading public health pamphlets.

"Delay in the diagnosis and treatment of cancer is one of the most important factors in the failure to obtain results by the methods now available—radium, X-rays and surgery."

What is considered delay insofar as the patient and physician are concerned?

This depends to some extent on location of the cancer, as a cancer on the skin or where it can be seen easily will not take as long to recognize as cancer inside the body.

Delay by the patient. This consists in having persistent symptoms for one month or longer before consulting a physician.

Delay by the physician. This consists in the waiting for any period longer than three weeks after the patient is first seen during which a diagnosis may be announced or a consultation with another physician or cancer specialist requested.

Salt Reduction Aid In Meniere's Disease

A recent valuable discovery is that most cases of Meniere's disease—hard of hearing, head noises, dizziness, nausea and vomiting—are due to "waterlogging" or swelling of a part of the hearing system. By cutting down on liquids and salty foods most of these cases obtain relief from these symptoms.

Just what causes this swelling or waterlogging in the ear is not definitely known. Dr. W. E. Grove, Milwaukee, in Annals of Ear, Nose and Throat, suggests that the swelling may be due to allergy—sensitiveness to foods or other substances—just as swelling occurs in other tissues due to allergy. Swelling may also be due to lack of certain vitamins in the food, or to the lack of a sufficient amount of some gland extract in the system.

It is fortunate that while the search for the cause of these symptoms continues, so much relief can be obtained by the medical treatment by histamine and by avoiding foods rich in salt.

Foods to avoid because they contain too much salt are: salted butter, ordinary bread, crackers, eggs, milk, spinach, carrots, oatmeal and all corned, pickled, smoked or salted foods.

Foods that can be eaten because they contain very little salt are: apples, asparagus, cabbage, Brussels sprouts, lettuce, grapes, oranges, lemons, sugar, jelly, unsalted butter and unsalted bread.

There are of course some cases where the histamine and food treatment gives little or no relief. What can be done for these cases because the symptoms are distressing and weakening?

Surgery is now used where medical and diet treatment fail, or for those who for economic or other reasons cannot be kept on a supervised treatment for a long time and for patients whose occupation interferes with obtaining benefit from medical or diet treatment because of carelessness in following a prescribed routine.

If you were to say the first bugle call of the day in the Army is "Reveille"—you'd be wrong. It's "First Call." But you probably know what cigarette gets first call with Army men—it's Camel. And Camel is the favorite with men in all branches of the service—Navy, Marines, Coast Guard, too. (Based on actual sales records from service men's stores.) And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are. —Adv.

Kenton County Farm News

Poultry Pointers for June—By Stanley Caton.

If the demand for poultry and eggs continues at the persent high rate it isn't too early to plan ahead on the flock for next year.

(1.) One of the diseases which can cut production in the winter and also at times causes a loss in hens in chicken pox. It can be prevented. Vaccinate your pullets and those cockerels which are to be carried over for breeders. Do this when they are about 12 weeks old, using chicken pox vaccine. Directions for vaccinating come with each bottle of vaccine. If pox outbreaks occurred in your neighborhood last year it is good insurance to vaccinate this year. The cost is low.

(2.) The feed situation does not seem to be getting better. Do all you can to supply green feed for the pullets. If they use the range unevenly move your feeders twice a week. This will help control diseases and parasites too. Artifical shade, the old "brush arbor" idea is a great help too on ranges where natural shade is not available.

(3.) Do you plan to keep cockerels from your flock for breeders next year? If you do, select the prospects before you sell your fryers. Pick the largest, blockiest and best feathered individuals. Too many flock owners select from the culls that are left after selling the best fryers. Rapid feathering and rapid growth are inherited. Breed for a better flock.

(4.) Cull a few hens at this time. There are many good reasons for this. It will save feed, create some income, and keep your profit up. Market those hens with yellow beaks or wilted combs. You can't afford to feed a non-laying hen a this time.

More Money Into Bonds

The average American family "should and must" be investing 25 percent of its income in War Bonds by the end of 1943, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., said recently in announcing a new "streamlined" bond campaign. "Of the 45 billion dollars still necessary to complete our war financing needs for 1943," Morgenthau said, "at least 18 billion dollars, or almost 25 per cent of the national income for the remainder of the year should come from purchases of bonds by individuals. From those workers earning $1.000 to $5.000 net, who will have seven-eights of all the current available individual savings, 25 cents of each dollar is not too much to expect. In fact, they should and must invest more if our goal is to be met."

May Still Reduce Points

Retailers may lower the point values of rationed meats and fats which are in danger of spoiling until July 31, OPA has decided. These emergency reductions must be accompanied by a cut of at least 25 percent in the established ceiling price of the item. If the point value is lowered more than 25 percent, the price must be reduced proportionately, but never more than 50 percent below the ceiling.

Ice Boxes For Civilians

A total of 239,575 ice-boxes are to be produced in the next three months for civilian use, according to a new order of WPB. Despite limited factory capacities and scarcity of materials, the production rate is expected to reach about 75.000 units a month.

How To Get Farm Supplies

Acording to a new WPB priority regulation a dealer must furnish farm supplies if the farmer signs a certificate stating: "I certify to the War Production Board that I am a farmer and that the supplies covered by this order are needed now and will be used for the operation of a farm." A total of 140 items are affected by this order. Such certification will enable the farmer to buy up to $25 worth of any of the items on the list, and more if the certificate is approved by his local country farm rationing committee.

Butter Price Reduced

A reduction of five to six cents a pound in the retail price of butter will go into effect Thursday, June 10. The OPA intends to effect the roll-back with a minimum of financial loss to the dairy industry, from the farm throug the retailer. With the subsidy paid to them by the government, buyers of butterfat will get as much for their butter as before, and will be expected to continue to pay going prices to the farmer. "Butter shall include butter manufactured by a farmer on his farm from milk produced on his farm" according to an amendment to Maximum Price Regulation No. 289 under which maximum prices were established for creamery butter.

Present collections of waste kitchen fats are about 85 million pounds annually.

THEY WERE EXPENDABLE

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox, Jr. During a raid against the Japs, the PT boats captured a landing barge and took prisoner a Jap captain and one of his men. But Squadron 3 had also suffered the loss of two of their original six boats, and they were planning to escape to China, when all of their torpedoes were gone, unless help arrived.

CHAPTER VIII

"When we went out that night," said Bulkeley, "we didn't dream we were to take our final crack at the Japs off Bataan. I took two boats—Kelly in the 34, riding myself with Akers in the 35—to see if we couldn't bag one of the Jap destroyers which the army could see in Subic Bay. They'd been driven far back, but from the highest ridge of the Bataan mountains they could still look down into Subic with their 20-power binoculars.

"But the admiral had said we weren't to go into the bay. We must cease them outside. The Japs had the bay's rim lined with guns, and it would be suicide. We got outside of Subic about eleven o'clock. All according to plan, Kelly hid his 34 boat in a cove just outside the bay, while I went into the entrance and raised a little bell—fired my machine guns so they could see the tracers, hoping a Jap destroyer would follow me out, whereupon Kelly was to come out of the cove and lam a couple of torpedoes into their engine room. It didn't work. The Japs had had all they wanted of us. But just as I was about to leave, I saw from the entrance the outline of a big ship—tied to Olongapo dock."

"She was a big one," said Akers, "maybe 10,000 tons. A tanker, we learned the next day. So we turned back, sneaked toward her—there was no fire on us yet—and cut loose two torpedoes. By the time they exploded, we had cleared the mouth of the bay. But from the mountains of Bataan the army watched her burn all night, and in the morning there she was, sunk at her dock."

"They were our last torpedoes fired in defense of Bataan," said Bulkeley. "Since December 7 we had probably sunk a hundred times our own combined tonnage in enemy warships. While we'd lost two of our six boats, neither had been hit by the enemy—both had gone aground in the dark.

"On the way back I realized that we had fired our last torpedoes, except those we would need to fill our tubes for the run to China. And we had just about enough gas to get us there, with bardly a barrel to spare. If we were ever to make the run, we must make it soon. And it was getting plain that we couldn't do much more for Bataan, which was on its last legs."

"I can tell you about the army," said Cox. "I used to get hored at Sisiman Cove and take trips to the front—sometimes up into the outposts. There were a lot of men in uniform on Bataan, but the front-line fighting soldiers consisted, first, of about two thousand Americans, well seasoned and good fighters. Then, about twelve hundred Filipino Scouts—equally well trained and equally good. Lastly, they had in the fighting line about twenty-seven thousand Filipino trainees—young kids who had never worn a uniform until a few weeks before the war started.

"Their officers were equally untrained. Toward the end, it was grotesque. Tough, experienced American Regular Army privates would be giving orders to Filipino generals.

"Those two thousand Americans and the twelve hundred Scouts were the only real fighting men on Bataan, and they were run ragged—every time the Japs punched a hole in the line, these experienced troops would have to be thrown in to plug it—everywhere at once.

"Then there was the item of equipment—so sure parts. They had a few tanks left, with their treads falling off. A missing fan belt would put an entire tractor out of the war—for want of a tread, a tank would be junk by the roadside.

"That's more or less how it looked to us on March 1," said Kelly, "which is a day I'll never forget. It started off in a curious way—it seemed that General MacArthur wanted to take a ride on one of our boats with Bulkeley. We felt honored, but I couldn't just understand why the General would choose a time like this for a pleasure trip. Still, orders were orders, and even the air force got theirs—or rather what was left of it, which was exactly four decrepit P-40's patched together from the pieces of many others.

"This proud American air force guaranteed us air superiority over that area of the bay while the General was out on the water. The area was only four square miles, and the time only half an hour—about all the superiority this pathetic air force was able to guarantee. While the General was having his ride I was worried—suppose something had come up which might upset our dash to China? I could see the men didn't understand it either, and were starting to speculate and gossip.

"But the General explained everything when he returned from the ride, hy officially presenting Bulkeley with the order decorating him with the D.S.C. We'd known about it for weeks, but this, it seemed, was the official presentation. He also congratulated the men on the fine work they had done, and handed each a package of cigarettes. It wasn't until that night that Bulkeley told me all this had been camouflage. For that morning the General had called him in and told him of the new plan. China was out for us, all right. Because Washington had made MacArthur Commander in Chief for all the Pacific and ordered him to leave. A submarine had been suggested, but MacArthur had said Bulkeley was the only commanding officer he knew in whom he had complete confidence—he was sailing with Buck. But he'd wanted to make a trial run first, and so added the little ceremony to allay the suspicions of the men. Because we were leaving Bataan in absolute secrecy and very soon.

"Of course to us this means that the China trip—our last hope of seeing America and escaping death or a Japanese prison—was gone forever. Now the MTB's were like the rest here in the islands—the expendables who fight on without hope to the end. So far as we knew, we would now finish up the war in the southern islands, when the Japs got around to mopping up the last American resistance there.

"The minute we knew we were to leave Bataan soon," continued Lieutenant Kelly after a pause, "we got to work on the four boats. We knew the trip would he tough, and the boats were old now. The engines had had double the number of hours' service without their customary thorough overhaul and returning, so they were making half their original speed.

"But the General explained everything when he returned from the ride."

"We planned to scrape the bottoms and overhaul their struts, but this was done for only three. My boat's turn was last, and meanwhile it was used for patrol.

"Overhauling these motors without any replacement parts was a terrible job. For instance. Any tankstown garage which overhauls a flivver back in the States always replaces the gaskets with new ones. Only we didn't have any. Or any sealing compound. So those old gaskets had to be carefully removed, handled as gently as though they were precious lace, and laid back in place when the motors were reassembled.

"How much gas could we carry? We experimented—put down planks on those ¾-inch plywood decks to strengthen them, and finally decided we could take a chance on piling twenty of those fifty-gallon drums on each boat.

"Naturally the crews got curious about all these preparations. Since we knew so much about what the Japanese were doing across the bay, we assumed their means for finding out about us were equally good. Anyway, Bulkeley and I had decided that there is only one way of keeping a valuable secret during a war: don't tell it yourself.

"But we had to tell the men something. So we said maybe, after we had exhausted all our gas here on Bataan, we would bead down for Cebu in the southern islands. Cebu, where there was plenty of food and more torpedoes, and where they had the most beautiful and languorous girls on the islands, and plenty of gasoline.

"We painted it as a golden spot. Only Bulkeley and I knew that when we got to Cebu we would be doomed —there was no gasoline there and only a little in Mindanao. We could never hope to get to Australia.

"But then there were the two correspondents—Clark Lee and Nat Floyd of the New York Times, and also Colonel Wong. They knew about the Chinese trip because the Admiral had authorized them to go with us. So we told them yes, we were still going to China, but we didn't know when—maybe not for a long time—and advised them if they bad any other chance to get out, by all means to take it. Meanwhile we kept on the boats all that landing-gear equipment we had assembled for the China trip—so if any hint of it had leaked out to the crew, they would think it was still on.

"Meanwhile MacArthur had told Bulkeley that Bataan would fall shortly, and Corregidor would go soon after—if it didn't get help from the States immediately. No help was being sent. Apparently it couldn't he gotten to us. Then the Japs could mop up the southern Philippines.

"It was a grim picture for us. But here was our last big job. MacArthur was the brains of the organization—the only general who could take that territory back. The whole allied defense depended on getting him to Australia.

"Bulkeley was reporting to bim every other day, but MacArthur refused to set a date for leaving—he wanted to stay as long as he could. At this time the boys on Bataan were back in their strongest positions—also their last-ditch defense line—and the Japs had bad about all they wanted monkeying with this line, and were waiting for reinforcements. But when news came that their General Yamashita was on bis way with many transports, bragging he would capture MacArthur within a month, our departure date was set for March 15.

"But to keep the men occupied and also to keep our secret, we went right on with plans for developing our shore base at Sisiman Cove. We installed a good cook's galley, fixed up the mess hall, screened in everything, as though we hoped to live there for months.

"We even took all our clothes off the boats and moved them into the nipa huts ashore.

"On the fourth of March there came a nice break for me. Peggy got me word that she had been transferred to Little Baguio hospital on Bataan, relieving one of the girls who had been working too long under fire, and I got the idea of inviting her down to our base for chow and to spend the evening. Dr. Nelson, who had been looking after my hand, was also on Little Baguio, and I invited him and his girl friend, too.

"You should have seen my ship perk up when I told them. The skipper was going to bring a girl aboard! They had the ship all spit and polish, ready for the big event. My cook, Reynolds, and the Filipino mess boy were tickled pink. They were going to show the army!

"You see the week before I'd gone over to Little Baguio—I'd bad only breakfast and arrived on foot late in the afternoon for my dressing, to spend the night and walk back. But they told me, regretfully of course, of a new ruling: rations were tightening—they were down to dried fish, plain rice, and one slice of bread—so absolutely no visitors could get food at the hospital. So I went to bed supperless, got up, watched them eat breakfast—they said how sorry they were they couldn't offer me any—hiked back all those miles over the hills, and at nine o'clock, sitting at our own mess table, ate seventeen hot cakes as fast as Reynolds could turn them out of the pan.

"Now their one idea was to show the army what real navy hospitality can be. It's true Peggy brougbt the coffee—we were out of that—but they rustled the rest. It started off with fruit cocktail, then a real pot roast of fresh meat with brown gravy, and in this a whole can of mushrooms which they'd been hoarding for some big occasion. Then rice and canned peas and beans, a delicious apple pie, and then coffee like only we can make in the navy. There was never such a dinner. Then we sat and talked, while the little waves lapped along the cove.

"I told Peggy I wanted to see her again, and soon. She said they were keeping her very busy, but she might get a night off on the fifteenth or before. There was no way I could call her, so she said she'd get to the signal-corps field telephone and ring me up about six o'clock on the eleventh, when we could make a definite date.

"I asked her if she couldn't make it sooner, and she said of course she wanted to, but didn't see how she possibly could. I wanted to tell her why I wanted it sooner. Then I stopped myself. Because in a war you don't tell anybody. Not anybody. And if they have any sense, and Peggy had plenty, they understand this and don't want to be told.

"So instead we talked about the war, and how they were low on quinine now—just had enough to give the worst malaria cases a light slug which would last only a short time —and how tired the soldiers were, how uncertain everything looked.

"'It's uncertain for us in the navy, too,' I said. 'One of these days even I am liable to disappear, without telling you good-by.'

GOD'S EXCEEDING GREAT PROMISES

LESSON TEXT—II Peter 1:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—He hath granted unto us His precious and exceeding great promises; that through these ye may become partakers of the divine nature.—II Peter 1:4, R. V.

Growth in grace and in knowledge of Christ are as normal and expected of the child of God as bodily growth of the physical child. Tragic as is the failure of one to develop physically, it is even more distressing and sad in the spiritual realm. Yet it is a common thing in our churches, where only comparatively few believers even come to full stature in Christ, where more have only a partial growth, and some are forever babes in Christ.

God has made perfect provision for us, and has in His Word given plain and explicit instructions on how to gain spiritual development.

I. All Things Provided (vv. 1-4).

In the physical world we are able to provide, at least in some degree, what is needed. We also know where to find mental food. Spiritual provision can come only from God, and we find from these verses that He has provided not just a small portion, or a limited ration, but "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," through the knowledge of Christ.

The "exceeding great and precious promises" of God are the abundant portion of the believer. They are sure promises, based in the altogether dependable Word of God.

God's provision for us in Christ has made it unnecessary to look elsewhere. Here is escape from the world's corruption, the new nature in Christ, faith, grace, peace, power —all in Him.

The opposite is also true, that without Christ men have only the weak and disappointing help of men on which to draw. Of such foolish ones the Lord said through Jeremiah the prophet that they "have committed two evils: They have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water" (Jer. 2:13).

II. All Diligence Required (vv. 5-7).

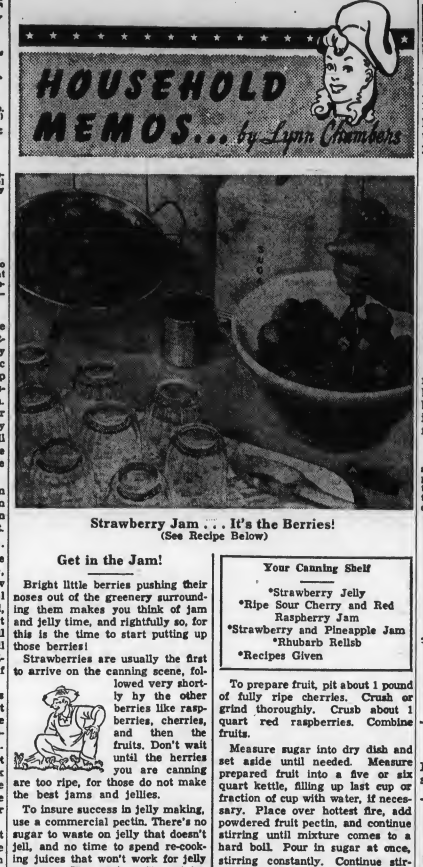
There is something that the Christian can do to insure his growth in grace. He is to be diligent, that is, have an earnest purpose and zeal to go ahead spiritually. This calls for application and endeavor, just as progress in any other sphere of life, and possibly more.

Faith is the foundation of all such growth and without it there is nothing on which to build. But on it, or better, "in" it, we bave all these other Christian graces springing up, as we give "all diligence" to encourage their growth.

Notice the ascending scale. Faith leads to virtue, that is, courageous, resolute Christian character. Then comes knowledge—the intelligent understanding and discernment of truth. This is bound together by temperance, meaning self-control. Next is patience, that steady endurance which keeps going in spite of trial or disappointment.

The sixth note in this octave of graces is godliness, which speaks of piety, true devotion to God, and reverence for His name. Such a believer will love his brethren in all brotherly kindness; and that leads us to the high point of love (the real meaning of "charity," v. 7). Here love for God is obviously in mind, as the crowning grace of the believer.

III. All Eternity Assured (vv. 8-11).



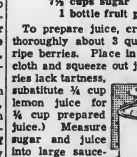
We should look forward to that abundant "entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" spoken of in verse 11. There is such a thing as being saved "so as by fire" (I Cor. 3:15), slipping into heaven with nothing to show for our life as followers of Christ bere on earth (read I Cor. 3:12-15).

God does not want for His people such an unseemly entrance upon eternity. Why should we be satisfied so to live that it may be true of us. Saved? Yes, but that is all! Are you satisfied with that prospect?

We should note, too, that this growth in grace will show itself in our daily life. It will keep us from being "barren (idle) and unfruitful" (v. 8). The Christian life must not be barren of true service for Christ, nor unfruitful of gracious harvest for Him. We are not on a sort of spiritual joy ride, sitting at ease as we speed on to the beavenly dwelling place.

Works do not save a man. We are justified before God by faith. But our faith is justified before men by our works of righteousness. Fruit grows on the living and healthy tree.

Observe that the Christian who lacks these graces (Do you?) is a nearsighted one who lacks both vision and grateful remembrance of God's loving-kindness (v. 9). How many members of our churches need their spiritual myopsy jogged and their spiritual eyes anointed with God's "eyesalve" (Rev. 3:18).

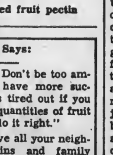


Strawberry Jam . . . It's the Berries!
(See Recipe Below)

Get in the Jam!

Bright little berries pushing their noses out of the greenery surrounding them makes you think of jam and jelly time, and rightfully so, for this is the time to start putting up those berries!

Strawberries are usually the first to arrive on the canning scene, followed very shortly by the other berries like raspberries, cherries, and then the fruits. Don't wait until the berries you are canning are too ripe, for those do not make the best jams and jellies.



To insure success in jelly making, use a commercial pectin. There's no sugar to waste on jelly that doesn't jell, and no time to spend re-cooking juices that won't work for jelly or jam. The recipes I'm giving this year are for smaller quantities of jam and jelly for most of us do not have too much sugar to spare on canning.

You'll like this standard recipe which can be used for making several different kinds of jelly:

Strawberry Jelly
Red Raspberry Jelly
Blackberry Jelly
Boysenberry Jelly
Dewberry Jelly
Loganberry Jelly
Youngberry Jelly
(Makes 11 glasses, 6 fluid ounces each)

4 cups juice
7½ cups sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare juice, crush or grind thoroughly about 3 quarts of fully ripe berries. Place in jelly bag or cloth and squeeze out juice. (If berries lack tartness, substitute ¼ cup lemon juice for ¼ cup prepared juice.) Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over the hottest fire and add bottled fruit pectin at once, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard for ½ minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly into glasses and paraffin at once.

Do you like the new combination jellies? You may use the above recipe, preparing the required 4 cups of juice from 3 quarts of berries including 2 or more of the berries listed above.

Ripe Sour Cherry and Red Raspberry Jam.
(Makes 8 glasses, 6 fluid ounces each)
3½ cups prepared fruit
4½ cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

Your Canning Shelf

Strawberry Jelly
Ripe Sour Cherry and Red Raspberry Jam
Strawberry and Pineapple Jam
Rhubarb Relish
Recipes Given

To prepare fruit, pit about 1 pound of fully ripe cherries. Crush or grind thoroughly. Crush about 1 quart red raspberries. Combine fruits.

Measure sugar into dry dish and set aside until needed. Measure prepared fruit into a five or six quart kettle, filling up last cup or fraction of cup with water, if necessary. Place over hottest fire, add powdered fruit pectin, and continue stirring until mixture comes to a hard boil. Pour in sugar at once, stirring constantly. Continue stirring, bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute.

Remove from fire. Skim, pour quickly. Paraffin hot jam at once.

Ever tried a rhubarb relish? You can put this lovely fruit up in this way:

Rhubarb Relish.
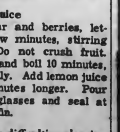
(Makes 4 pints)

1 quart diced rhubarb
1 quart onions, finely cut
4 cups brown sugar
1 tablespoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon allspice
1 teaspoon cloves
1 teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon pepper
1 pint vinegar

Combine all ingredients and heat slowly to boiling. Simmer 45 to 50 minutes or until thick. Turn into sterile glasses and seal with paraffin. Serve with meat.



One of the most delightful of jams is the one combining our favorites, strawberries and pineapple.

Strawberry and Pineapple Jam.
(Makes 10 glasses, 8 ounces each)

2 cups crushed strawberries
2 cups crushed canned or fresh pineapple
7 cups sugar
½ bottle commercial fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, crush completely or grind the berries. Cut fine or grind the fresh pineapple or use already canned fruit. Combine fruits. Measure sugar and fruit into large kettle, mixing well. Bring to a full, rolling boil over high heat. Stir constantly during boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove from heat and stir in pectin. Stir and skim by turns for just 5 minutes to cool slightly to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly and paraffin or seal at once.

You have often heard it said that perfect jelly or jam can be obtained even without the use of a commercial pectin. But, to make good jelly, the fruit must contain both pectin and acid in the right quantity to jell—be it for jelly or jam. Strawberries contain acid but usually lack sufficient pectin. That's why pectin of the commercial variety is added when making jelly or jam, or, as in this next recipe, lemon juice is added:

Strawberry-Lemon Jam.
4 cups washed, hulled strawberries
5 cups sugar
½ cup lemon juice

Combine sugar and berries, letting stand a few minutes, stirring occasionally. Do not crush fruit. Bring to a boil and boil 10 minutes, stirring constantly. Add lemon juice and cook 2 minutes longer. Pour into sterilized glasses and seal at once with paraffin.

Are you having difficulties planning meals with points? Stretching your meats? Lynn Chambers can give you help if you write her, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply, in care of her at Western Newspaper Union, 210 South Desplaines Street, Chicago, Illinois.

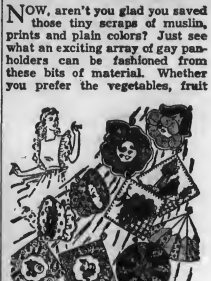
Lynn Says:

Jelly-Making: Don't be too ambitious. You'll have more success and be less tired out if you can only small quantities of fruit at a time and "do it right."



Unless you bave all your neighbors and cousins and family belping you on canning, and bave to tackle the job alone, do not try to put up bushels of produce.

Have a day for jelly-making and jam-making just as you set aside a day for washing and ironing. Make it a rule not to have housecleaning or any other big job on the same day for you'll be too tired to concentrate as you should on canning.

Select your jars and examine them for cracks or imperfections the day before you do your canning. Get them all washed, too, so sterilizing is the only big job you have left when actual jelly-making day comes up.

In getting strawberries ready for canning or jelly, wash them before hulling. They won't drink up as much water that way.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER
Improper brake adjustment is a rubber-waster. Have your brakes checked regularly. If one wheel "takes hold" before the others, its rubber carries the full brunt of stopping the car, with resultant excessive rubber wear.
In their search for rubber substitutes, scientists are now probing myrcene, a turpentine derivative discovered about fifty years ago. The list of rubber "sources" is growing almost daily.
It is expected that the 1943 harvest of crude rubber in the United States will total 600 tons, all guayule. Normally this country consumed about 600,000 tons of rubber a year.

CHATTERER FRIGHTENS SAMMY JAY

CHATTERER, THE RED SQUIRREL was tickled mightily with himself—yes, sir, he was tickled mightily with himself. You see, he had found a way of getting into Farmer Brown's cornerib where was stored so much beautiful yellow corn that it seemed to him that there was enough for all the squirrels in the world. All he had to do was to go up to Farmer Brown's dooryard very early in the morning, before Farmer Brown's Boy was up, climb the tree with the branch hanging low over the cornerib, drop down on the roof and slip through the hole he had found close under one edge of the roof.

Now the more some people have the more they want. It is the very worst kind of selfishness and is called greediness. Chatterer had found a way to get all the corn he wanted without working for it, and there was enough to feed him as long as he lived, though he should live to be a hundred years old. To be sure, it wasn't his. It was Farmer Brown's. But Chatterer looked on Farmer Brown and Farmer Brown's Boy as his enemies, and he could see nothing wrong in taking things from his enemies. Perhaps he didn't want to see anything wrong.

After Chatterer had made a few successful trips to the cornerib, he began to look upon it as his own. He would sometimes hide in the old stone wall, where he could watch Farmer Brown's Boy open the door of the cornerib and fill a basket with yellow ears to feed to the hens and the pigs and the horses. At such times Chatterer would work himself into a great rage, as if Farmer Brown's Boy was stealing from him. But there was nothing he could do about it, so he would go back to the Old Orchard and scold for an hour. But what made him still angrier was to see Sammy Jay help himself to a few grains of corn from between the cracks in the walls of the cornerib. He forgot how Sammy had first told him about the cornerib, and how Sammy had warned him about Shadow the Weasel. That is the trouble with greed—it forgets everything but the desire to have and to keep others from having. Chatterer didn't say anything to Sammy Jay, because he knew it would be of no use. Besides, if he did, Sammy might find him over in the cornerib some day and make such a fuss that Farmer Brown's Boy would find him.

Finally, Chatterer thought of a plan and chuckled wickedly. The next morning he was over in the cornerib bright and early. This time he stayed there until it was time for Sammy Jay to arrive. Peeping out of the hole by which he came and went, he saw Sammy come flying from the Old Orchard. Sammy made no noise, for, you see, Sammy meant to steal, too. Presently Sammy found a crack against which an ear of corn lay very close. He began to peck at it and pick out the grains. Chatterer stole over to it, taking the greatest care not to make a sound. Presently Sammy's black bill came poking through the crack. Chatterer seized it and held on.

Poor Sammy Jay! He was terribly frightened. He thought that it was some kind of a trap. He beat his wings and tried to scream, but couldn't because he couldn't open his mouth. Then Chatterer let go so suddenly that Sammy almost fell to the ground before he could catch his balance. He didn't wait to see what had caught him. He started for the Green Forest as fast as his wings could take him, and as he went he screamed with fright and anger. Chatterer chuckled and his chuckle was a very wicked-sounding chuckle.

"I guess," said Chatterer, "that Sammy Jay will leave my corn alone after this."

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

Kitchen Grease Salvage Important

Salvage offers all women an opportunity to do something to help win the war. Every woman who saves kitchen grease and enlists others to do the same thing is an important soldier on the home front.

At the present time kitchen grease is a critically needed war material. The Government's quota calls for 16,667,000 pounds per month and less than half of this is now being salvaged. If every housewife would participate in this salvage, it would go a long way toward meeting the glycerine requirements of the war.

A few words about what happens to kitchen grease will indicate how important it is. The grease saved in the kitchen is taken by the housewife to the butcher, who sells it to the render, who in turn sells it to the scrap maker, who extracts the glycerine. At the present time the Government and the soap manufacturers say there will be enough soap to meet all civilian needs this year. This favorable condition will continue, if all housewives participate in the salvaging of kitchen grease. A tablespoonful of kitchen grease saved each day results in a pound in 31 days. In August, 1942, when this salvage was started, American housewives saved enough to fire 12 million anti-aircraft guns. The amount increased each month and in March, 1943, it was enough to fire 28 million anti-aircraft guns. In 1943 more ammunition will be required than ever before and it will be necessary to provide more grease.

Glycerine is also used for vital mechanisms in big field and naval guns, for ship compasses, for hydraulic and steering apparatus, and as an ingredient of the protective coating on ships, tanks and guns. In addition to these uses, it is an important ingredient of the ointments and salves that are used to alleviate suffering from burns and wounds.

The lives and welfare of millions of our fighting men depend upon the cooperation of American women in saving small amounts of grease from their kitchens. A tiny drop has sufficient value to make it worth bothering about.

The Government does not ask you to put fats that can be used for frying or other cooking purposes into the waste fat can, but only after you have completely used up the food value. All meat cooked under the broiler or in the roasting pan should make a substantial contribution to the waste fat collection. If drippings are used for gravy, then put what is left into the waste fat can. Whenever greasy pans or skillets are washed, a little hot water should be poured into them and when the fat is loosened this should be poured into a dish to cool until the fat rises to the top and solidifies. This fat should then be lifted off and dropped into the waste fat can. The same thing may be done with the surplus fats from oups and stews. There are other valuable fats, such as excess margarine and butter substitute. These should be put into the waste fat can along with the grease from fowl, beef, lamb, fish, pork, sausage and bacon. All fat of vegetables or animal origin produces glycerine and is valuable wher it is strained.

If possible, keep the fats can in a cool place. However, even rancid grease produces glycerine. As for the container, any tin can will do except an oil can. Do not put grease in either glass or pasteboard containers.

If every woman will save grease and influence her neighbors to do likewise, then we will be able to pass the ammunition in sufficient guantity to ensure a quicker victory.

Farmers Secure Out Of County Labor

Arrangements have been completed for several farmers to go to eastern Kentucky the first of the week to interview prospective farm help according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

The State Extension Service is locating prospective help for local farmers. The farmers in turn will interview this help in view of employment by the month or longer.

The most practical solution to the farm labor problem will be found in the farm family, the employment of custom machinery for special jobs and in the co-operative exchange of labor, machinery and equipment between neighbors. We are all in a war which involves obligations of duty and service from every citizen. We must become more neighborly and cooperative in production of food for Victory.

Farmers who cannot secure needed help locally for producing their 1943 crops should file their applications for labor at the County Agent's office in Burlington.

William H. May, Candidate for Lieutenant Governor Makes the Following Statement:

William H. May, present Commissioner of Agriculture and a candidate for Lieutenant Governor, today announced that he will not submit a detailed platform in behalf of his candidacy, since the administration of State Government depends largely upon the Governor and all candidates for Governor have submitted to the voters platforms upon which their candidacy is based.

In a prepared statement for the press Mr. May made the following comments with regard to proposed platforms by candidates for Lieutenant Governor.

"It has been the custom in the past for candidates for the office of Lieutenant Governor to announce detailed platforms. In reality, the Lieutenant Governor as Cheif Legislative Officer of the State has little opportunity to put into effect a platform of his own, he must, rather, rely upon the intelligence of the voters in selecting a Gubernatorial Nominee with a sound administrative and legislative platform. The Lieutenant Governor should then pledge himself to support that platform and to carry through with the wishes of the voters as indicated by the Gubernatorial selection. In adition, the Lieutenant Governor must serve from time to time as acting Governor and it would be folly for an acting Governor to desrupt a well ordered program by attempting to put into affect his own platform, thus discrediting the efforts of the Governor selected by the voters.

"With this thought in mind I pledge myself to support to the fullest extent the platform of the Gubernatorial Nominee chosen by the voters of Kentucky at the Democratic Primary on August 7th."

Tin Can Salvage Important

Tin is a precious metal in our country today. With about 90% of our former source of supply cut off by the war in the Pacific, it has become necessary to salvage tin coating from tin cans used in every home in the country.

Before the war, Americans used about 17 billion tin containers every year. Most of these were a nusance, and found their way into the rubbish heap. Now that tin cans are going to war it opens one more avenue for women to do their part in keeping our armed forces supplied with food and medicines, not to mention gas masks and vital parts for ships, planes and tanks.

The way to start tin cans on their way to war is to rinse them carefully, remove or fold in tops and bottoms, take off paper labels, and step on the cans firmly.

The prepared tin cans you turn into the war effort are shipped to big detinning plants where 10 tons of them at one time go into the solution which removes the tin. The tin is in reality a steel cylinder coated with a thin layer of tin about 1% tin by weight and 99% steel. Tin on the average tin can is about the thickness of one-third of a human hair, but has so much resistance to acid and corrosion that this tin layer seals the food away from the steel and prevents rust, ptomaine, or contamination.

The importance of collecting all the tin cans might be further impressed upon you if we stop to realize that every ton of tin cans produces only about 20 pounds of pure tin, as against 1,980 pounds of steel scrap.

The real value of tin is in the fact that there is no satisfactory substitute for tin in its many war uses. Tin is used in the production of airplane motors, guns, hand grenades, torpedoes, in warships and submarines; tin ingots go to compaines producing cans and containers for food, both for your own use and for the troops abroad, and the men at sea; still other ingots go to the technical laboratories and special factories producing supplies for the army and Navy Medical Corps, and for emergency supplies used by the soldier himself in the field, when wounded and waiting assistance.

No more spectacular proff of the essential service of tin in this war has appeared than the "syrette." This is the term applied by the Army and Navy Medical Corps to little individual morphine hypodormic syringes. Every Army and Navy Medical Corps officer and doctor carries a supply with him. Every Army and Navy nurse uses them. Every medical parachutist, every flight surgeon, carries an extra supply. Every long range bomer is equipped with these little tin hypoderm ics. So, too, is every field and naval hospital. Syrettes are standard equipment in arctic kits, jungle kits, aeronautic kits—used by soldiers, sailors, marines, and coast guardsmen who must fight alone.

Your tin cans contribute to the making of these little angles of mercy that will help to save the lives of thousands of our fighting men. It is possible that the tin can you save will eventually find their steel in a cannon sending sheels toward the enemy on the European front, while their tin, 15,000 miles away, covers the little syrette which gives a wounded American soldier the relief necessary to preserve his life until aid reaches him.

It is necessary for every woman to save the tin cans used in her home. Remember the procedure for preparing them—rinse thoroughly, remove or fold in tops and bottoms, take off paper labels, step on firmly, and place in a basket or box for collection.

Butter Price Roll-Back

Inasmuch as the United States Department of Agriculture will support the wholesale prices of butter at levels equivalent to 46 cents per pound until June 30, 1944, farmers should continue to receive the same prices they've been getting for butter-fat despite the 5 to 6 cents a pound roll-back in the retail price of butter at grocery stores, was an announcement made today by the Kentucky USDA War Board.

The Government 5-cents-a-pound subsidy to creameries and other buyers of butter-fat is being paid to all creameries who make 100 pounds or more of butter a month. Therefore, creameries are receiving as much for butter now as they were and are expected to continue paying the going prices to farmers.

Farmers who sell their butter-fat to a creamery and buy back butter for their own needs should receive the five cents a pound reduction in price on their butter, because the creamery receives the 5 cents a pound subsidy on that butter the same as on all other.

Farmers generally will not be eligible for the 5-cents a pound subsidy, but in the event a dairy farmer produces a 1000 pounds or more for any month he will be eligible for subsidy payments for that month.

Wool Delivery Postponed To Allow Time For Shearing.

The delivery of the Boone County Wool Pool has been postponed for about two weeks to allow time for shearing according to the county agent's office.

There are approximately 2,000 sheep not sheared at the present time. Most of these shep are in the north section of the county. Custom shearers have promised to shear these sheep inside the next ten days.

The pool will announce the date for delivery through the county papers the week before the clip is to be delivered.

County Poultrymen Urged To New Goal

Boone County poultrymen are asked by the government to produce approximately 738,000 dozen eggs this year, 6.7 per cent more than in 1942, as their share in the Food for Victory program, the National Poultry Defense Committee estimated today.

This county goal, which is based on the percentage increase suggested for Kentucky by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, can be reached if adequate supplies of labor and feed are available, declared Committee Chairman Hobart Creighton.

"Poultry farmers are now working harder than ever in all-out war production," Creighton said, "continuing the fine job they did in this county last year by producing approximately 691,000 dozen eggs to help supply civilian, military and lend-lease needs. Also two developments during last year have resulted in larger laying flocks on most farms today:

"First, egg prices as shown by purchases of the A & P Tea Company, one of the larger buyers which aid $108,000 in Kentucky last year for 360,000 dozen, were so favorable that farmers saved an unusually large proporation of potential layers. Second, conditions in 1942 were good for raising pullets, as Fall weather was generally mild and the average hatching date was early.

"Those factors point to increased egg production," Creighton explained, "if an improvement can be made in the farm skilled labor situation and if farmers can get enough protein feeds. There are critical shortages of protein ingredients because imports have been cut so drastically. Even soybean oil meal is not being processed fast enough to meet demands. These are major problems facing the industry."

Kentucky poultrymen, who produced a total of 93,666,000 dozen eggs in 1942, are asked for 99,992-000 dozen this year as their share of the national egg goal of 4,780,-000,000 dozen.

Sergeant Charles E. Peebles of the U. S. Army is home visiting his father, Edward Peebles of Crittenden, Ky. and his sister, Mrs. Grover Young of Walton for the first time since enlisting nearly two and a half years ago.

During that time he was stationed in Bermuda for two years and has just returned to the state in the last few months. He has been in the West Indies and South America serving as escort to prisoners of war that were being moved.

At the end of this visit he expects to go to Camp Wheeler, Georgia.

More Milk Concerns PCA

The critical need for averting the usual summer slump in milk flow and maintaining maximum production of all dairy products is currently being emphasized to all Boone County members of the Northern Kentucky Production Credit Association, reports Leonard C. Taylor, secretary-treasurer of the association.

Mr. Taylor said an eight-point program to guide farmers in their efforts for greater efficiency and higher production of milk has been inaugurated by the War Food Administration and dairy industry committee through the agricultural Extension Service. The program stresses abundant pasture, supplementing short pastures with dry feed, liberal feeding of roughages, 400 to 500 pounds of hay a month per cow, two and one-half tons or more of silage per cow per year, balanced rations, and eight weeks rest period before freshening, and raising calves with less milk.

He said that although some producers are handicapped by shortage of labor or inadequate facilities to increase materially the size of their herds, these same producers can by using temporary pasture crops through the heat of summer, supplemental feed, and better balanced rations keep their cows in heavier production over a longer period of time. If each cow can be fed good enough to produce an additional 80 pounds of milk—two or three days production for the average cow—the nation's 2,000,000,000 pound increase will be met.

"Farmers who have a sound basis for credit may obtain loans through the Northern Kentucky Production Credit Association to maintain production through increased feed, better balanced rations, to pay for extra labor, milking machines, cooling equipment, improvement or additions to barns, seeding and renovating pastures and meadows, to increase their herds or any other expense involved in obtaining high production, "Mr. Taylor said. "Loans can be repaid on a monthly basis from milk or cream checks, with interest charged on outstanding balances only."

He further said that he hoped people would watch for the Schedule and take advantage of the chance to purchase their license. If this is done much needed Gasoline and Rubber can be saved for more necessary driving.

Survey Being Made To Locate Farm Labor

Local committeemen assisted by neighborhood leaders are making a complete survey of all available farm labor and machinery available for custom work according to H. R. Forkner, Count yAgent.

A prelimary survey by leaders shown that generally speaking there is no such thing as available farm labor that can be secured when needed. A complete survey is being made of all boys and girls from 14 to 18 years of age who are not employed but would be willing to work on farms. This program is being correlated with a program in Kenton County in which a survey is being made through the city schools. Help located through these surveys will be made available to all farmers.

Local leaders who will assist in setting up community farm labor centers for locating and placing farm help are as follows:

EUROPE:
'Mellow Light'

Even as Prime Minister Winston Churchill had declared that the "mellow light of victory" was already playing on the Allies, the Axis had been tensely alert for the long-promised invasion of Europe.

Axis communiques had early reported attempted Allied landings on "stepping stone" islands between Africa and Italy. First of these was the Rome and Berlin radio reports of a Commando movement on the tiny island of Lampedusa, bordering the Tunisian coast. Then came the Rome communique announcing that the garrison defending beleaguered Pantelleria had been called on to surrender by Allied forces. Pantelleria had experienced a pounding such as even Malta had not suffered, for here the devastating Allied bomb onslaughts from the air had been accompanied by withering bombardment of Italian positions by unopposed Allied naval forces.

Never before during the war had Prime Minister Churchill spoken so confidently as during his report to parliament concerning the European situation in which he described the amphibious operations of a "peculiar complexity" against the enemy. Concerning the Allied air offensive which observers had termed the actual first phase of the invasion, he declared that nothing will turn the Allies from their intention of accomplishing "the complete destruction of our foes by bombing from the air, in addition to all other means."

TAXES:
New Levies Ahead

With the pay-as-you-go bill now operative under presidential approval, congressional leaders began consideration of additional tax sources to meet the administration's request that new tax measures be undertaken as a means of closing the inflationary gap caused by the nation's tremendous purchasing power.

While President Roosevelt had left up to congress the type of new taxes to be adopted before summer recess, he expressed his opposition to a general sales tax on the grounds that it would impose too heavy a burden on the poorer people. While a compulsory savings plan is not necessary now, the President indicated that ultimately a combination of enforced savings and taxes would be required to meet his original budget request for $16,000,000,000 in new revenue for fiscal 1944.

The Federal Reserve board recently estimated excess purchasing power at $35,000,000,000.

SUBSIDIES:
Grange Head Demurs

Albert S. Goss, master of the National Grange, predicted that if the government employs subsidy payments to roll back food prices, "the nation is headed directly for inflation and inevitable chaos."

The farm leader added that in his belief, a system of price controls by subsidy would lead to a food shortage for America and her allies.

Testifying before a senate agricultural subcommittee, the Grange master predicted that a 10 per cent roll back in the retail prices of butter and meats, already ordered, would discourage production. "There are indications already," he said, "that the butter and milk output are being reduced substantially." Mr. Goss contended that instead of the present price control system as a control of inflation, an effort should be made to bring supply and demand into balance.

GAS:
FDR Warns Axis

President Roosevelt served blunt notice on the Axis that the use of poison gas against any one of the United Nations would result in swift and full retaliation by the United States with "terrible consequences" to enemy munitions centers, seaports and other military objectives.

This was the third time in 12 months the President had warned the Axis that the use of gas would be a fatal boomerang. He said evidence was "being reported with increasing frequency from a variety of sources" that the enemy powers were making "significant preparations" indicative of an intention to use poisonous or noxious gases.

Observers who noted that the President's warning was similar in character to one issued by the British government recently, believed he had both Germany and Japan in mind.

RUSSIA:
Tactics in Reverse

Using tactics in which the Allies had given them bitter lessons in Western Europe, the Nazis employed their waning air force in massed bombing attacks against Russian armament factories.

Typical of this effort were the attempts to wreck the giant Gorki works, 250 miles east of Moscow. While German and Soviet communiques differed on the extent of the damage, both agreed that the attacks were of a ferocious nature. Moscow radio admitted that casualties and some damage were caused, but maintained that German reports were grossly exaggerated.

Retaliatory raids were made on a big scale by Russian bombers which attacked the Unecha junction on the Bryansk-Gomel railroad, blowing up munitions dumps and fuel stores.

Meanwhile in the midst of counter claims about opposing losses in the Caucasus, a German transocean agency broadcast predicted a big scale Russian attack on Novorossisk.

TIGHTER BELTS:
Forecast for '44

Somber warning that American civilians may have to tighten their belts in 1944 was sounded by the bureau of economics of the U. S. department of agriculture.

The bureau in a review of the current situation said that while there are enough rationed foods on hand, together with expected production to maintain present eating levels for the remainder of 1943, the outlook for 1944 may not be so favorable.

The review stated that vegetable production is running about 13 per cent below last year; that early freezes have cut crops of apricots, cherries, peaches, plums and prunes materially below 1942. Supplies of eggs next fall and winter "will be considerably below current levels," the review added, while livestock may be adversely affected.

DRIVING BAN:
For All U. S.?

Extension to the entire nation of the pleasure driving ban and other restrictions on motoring in 12 eastern states was predicted by Maj. Jubal R. Parten, transportation director in the petroleum administration.

Specifically, Major Parten said that the petroleum administration had been considering for some time the advisability of halting pleasure driving in Middle Western states and that such action for the entire nation may be looked for soon.

ARGENTINA:
Neutral for Present

The kaleidoscopic revolt in Argentina that had produced two new presidents in almost as many days had not shown the same speedy results with respect to the abolition of Argentina's policy of neutrality toward the Axis.

This latter was evident when the government of President Pedro Ramirez was pledged to an international policy of "neutrality for the present" and "loyal co-operation with nations of the Americas in conformance with existing pacts."

The Ramirez regime succeeded the brief provisional government of Gen. Arturo Rawson, who resigned after ousting isolationist President Ramon S. Castillo in an army-supported revolution.

Scanning the new government's personnel for possible clues as to future international policy, observers noted that President Ramirez's new cabinet included eight military men to only one civilian.

PACIFIC:
U. S. Airmen Strike

Allied airmen continued to strike heavy blows at Jap positions from the Aleutians clear across the Pacific to Central China.

Kiska was again the target of the Aleutians assault, with Allied Liberators and Vega Venturas joining in the battering drive against this last enemy outpost in the archipelago. Over in the Solomons, Choiseul island and the Munda air bases were attacked by American planes. In New Guinea, Allied attack planes supporting ground forces in the Mubo area strafed enemy positions on strategic Green's Hill.

American and Chinese air superiority in the middle Yangtse valley continued to be manifest, as fliers from both forces swept over the Hupeh-Hunan battle area without meeting opposition.

FATHERS:
Work or Fight Mixup

A misunderstanding over the details of the War Manpower commission's "work or fight" edict had been responsible for the induction of some fathers into military service in violation of draft regulations, WMC Chairman Paul V. McNutt revealed.

Mr. McNutt pointed out that the "work or fight" order had directed that fathers and others of draft age with dependents be inducted if they were employed in any of the 70 "nondeferable" occupations listed by the War Manpower commission. Selective service regulations prohibit the drafting of fathers not in deferable jobs.

PLEDGE:
'Exploitation's End'

A world freed from international exploitation was listed by President Roosevelt as one of the postwar objectives of the United Nations.

The President declared that better use of human and natural resources must be assured in the postwar world if living standards are raised, continuing, "and I may add—the better use of these resources without exploitation by any nation."

Speaking to delegates from the recent United Nations Food conference, Mr. Roosevelt summed up "our ultimate objective" in this manner:

"It is to build for ourselves—meaning all men, everywhere—a world in which each individual human being shall have the opportunity to live out his life in peace; to work productively, earning at least enough for his actual needs and those of his family; to associate with the friends of his choice; to think and worship freely; and to die secure in the knowledge that his children, and their children shall have the same opportunities."

SLAUGHTER:
Nazis Massacre Dutch

Out of tightly censored Holland came news of fresh Nazi atrocities. These latest reports concerned the killing of thousands of Dutch citizens in mass executions following a general strike that had halted all activity for nearly a week. They were made public by the Office of War Information.

Allied sources learned that the strike had started when Nazi authorities announced that all members of the former Dutch army paroled in 1940 would be sent to Germany to work in Nazi war factories. Within half an hour, reports said, factories, shops, public offices and even courts stopped. Within a few hours public services and transportation ceased to function.

Ruthless executions then were undertaken by the Germans. Bodies of the slain Dutch patriots were left where they fell in public squares and outside cities. Work resumption was eventually ordered by "Good Patriots" in order to avoid further slaughter.

AIR FREIGHT:
Plans for Future

Prophetic of the future, the civil aeronautics board received a request for a charter for a vast network of aerial freight lines serving the United States and many foreign countries.

The petitioner, the Keeshin Air Freight company, asked authority to serve 200 major cities in this country as well as many points in foreign countries through an exchange of freight at 18 "gateways."

BRITISH-INDIA PROBLEM

It will probably be denied, but the inside fact is that U. S. Ambassador Bill Phillips came back from India with a blunt, in spots bitter, report against the British.

He felt that the United States should do something about the festering Indian political situation, that the Indian army and people could not be a force in the war until the question was cleaned up. Also he was straight-from-the-shoulder in his criticism of Field Marshal Wavell whom he feels is not suited for the job and should be removed.

Phillips not only gave this report to the President but he also had a conference with Winston Churchill.

Ambassador Phillips' report is most significant, because he has been pro-British, served as minister to Canada, has been a consistent believer that our policy must go hand-in-hand with the British. Phillips is mild, not addicted to crusading, but a thorough, conscientious diplomat, reporting what he believes to be the facts.

Among other things, Phillips reported that mediation between different Indian factions and the British government was possible now; also desirable. He feels that if some such move is not undertaken now, he should not go back to India, nor should any other U. S. ambassador, since the presence of an American envoy would be taken as the stamp of U. S. approval for British policy.

What the President said to Churchill on the Indian problem is his secret. But it is known that Roosevelt has hoped for a year that the British would do something about India. However, he also feels very strongly that the United States should not interfere in Britain's colonial problems.

Meanwhile, the British, with an army large enough to handle any problem inside India, seem content merely to sit on the lid—despite American pleas that the Burma road must be reopened and despite the fact that Indian troops will not fight the Japs wholeheartedly unless they have a small investment in the Four Freedoms for which they are supposed to fight.

WOMAN WATCHES ARMY COOKS

Miss Mary I. Barber, Washington's first dollar-a-year woman, has now begun to bring long-needed thrift to army mess kitchens. If Miss Barber has her way, the army's 250,000 cooks will be persuaded to make soup out of the left-overs and cut down the quota for the garbage pails.

In fact, her save-left-overs idea has already gone so far that certain pig farmers near army camps are complaining that they don't get enough garbage these days.

Miss Barber was borrowed by the quartermaster corps from the Kellogg company at Battle Creek to teach tough mess sergeants, among other things, that a camp menu does not have to be arranged one week in advance, and stuck to religiously. If, for instance, a camp mess has several hundred chickens left over from Sunday dinner, they can be used on Monday, not thrown into the garbage pail.

Unfortunately, a lot of mess sergeants had been doing that, partly because the menu for Monday was already arranged. Also it is against the law for the army to sell food, nor can it be given away. It must be thrown away. This has been done in the past via garbage trucks to the highest bidding hog dealers.

Now, however, Miss Barber is helping to arrange master menus, which though they specify soup, do not name the variety. This gives the cook an option to make soup out of whatever his left-overs permit.

This all sounds simple to the average housewife, but believe it or not, it has not always been done by the army.

Another trick is to save all dripping fats from bacon or sausage, and use them in a cream sauca for cauliflower, or other vegetables.

WHITE HOUSE BLACK MARKET

The White House is having its troubles with the Black Market. The White House architect called up the Georgetown Electric company recently to buy No. 12 copper wire for rewiring a part of the Executive Mansion. But there was no copper wire to be had.

"Where can we get it?" the architect asked.

"Baltimore, on the Black Market —only it will cost you 20 cents a foot instead of seven cents."

"Well, we can't have anything to do with the Black Market," was the White House reply, and the architect went shopping elsewhere."

Victory Inevitable Despite Deadly, Undefeated Foe

Optimistic Americans Fail to Realize Enemy's Strength in Experienced Men, Naval Forces and Air Power.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

"But, General . . ."

The other day I said that after a long and enlightening talk by a high army officer who was patiently and painfully trying to show us why, despite the recent victories of the Allies, we still had a formidable enemy to meet, a dangerous, deadly and undefeated enemy. Victory, of course, is certain (eventually) but serious reverses, setbacks and sacrifices are still before us, he had said.

I believe my own exclamation, "but, general" is typical of some of those "buts" which have srisen in your minds.

America is the super-duper land of inventive genius, business genius, organizing genius, mass production, high standard of living, assembly line, giant industry, efficiency, wealth, central heating, apple pie and unlimited opportunity. True, we got our first real drubbing at Pearl Harbor but we came back; the British were licked at Singapore, too, but they won the battle of Britain. Latterly, we collaborated in the smashing victory of Tunisia . . . the Russians beat 'em at Stalingrad, the Chinese have held 'em off for what seems a lifetime. Why, then . . .?

The general looked a little weary but he went on politely—I can't quote all he said but will give you the parts the OWI says is "okeh."

"The enemy has the biggest, most effective fighting force in history."

Biggest? But America and Russia . . . and Australia?

Armed Strength

Figures (U. S. Army official): The enemy still has 17 millilon men under arms. The German soldiers and their satellites, some a little ragged, still total 17 million trained men. The Japs have at least three million in uniform. These (the good and the bad) combine to make "the biggest most effective fighting mass ever assembled in history." Remember, the enemy has been years building this force, and the civilians in these militaristic countries have sacrificed all the things necessary—things we wouldn't even think of rationing, including liberty and decency.

In cold numbers, the enemy still outnumbers us in land forces.

And even today, after Midway, Guadalcanal, Attu, Tunisia, Stalingrad, and the bombings, the enemy is still well equipped, well trained, well co-ordinated, can operate under adverse conditions and in the face of terrific hardships which our troops are just now beginning to master.

That is a brief sum up of the enemy land forces from a military man's point of view.

As to the enemy naval forces.

The Germans have, though you may not have realized from recent news, a small but highly specialized navy still afloat, plus the sub!

The submarine is still the biggest Allied problem. Submarines are tough animals now. Our own are tough enough and these animals are the German specialty. Depth bombs have to go deep to do any more than break the glass in the shaving mirrors and instrument faces. Even in the last war, it took a lot of depth bombs to get one sub. Now the subs can crash dive, shiver and rise to fight back . . . and fight back they can! They are mounted with guns, they can stand up to an escort ship, at least a corvette, and it takes a destroyer or a fast cruiser to catch them even when they stay on the surface where they can return fire. The small stuff (30 caliber) bounces off their scales.

Japan's Navy

The surface ships which Germany has are not so much of a factor. But Japan's navy is still to be reckoned with. It is not destroyed but it has to be before we can achieve victory in the Pacific. Just taking islands won't do the job—and see how long it took to take an island, first Guadalcanal; now (almost at this writing) Attu.

Airforce: America now leads the world. But remember Germany was the first to build a supreme "luftwaffe" and that luftwaffe and the men who made it are not all dead yet. Japan's vaunted Zeros which could outmaneuver us because of their lightness, it is true, exploded at one shot. They have been improved. Germany has improved a number of her models, too. She is holding back many for defense.

The enemy army, as a whole, is better trained by experience than our men. But those of our men who have had equal training and experience are as good or better, man for man, although not yet perhaps, officer for officer. Remember, Germany and Japan bred an officer class. We trained a few professional officers, limited their prestige, resources and opportunity. The majority of our officers in wartime come from civilian life. They are good, when they get the training and the experience.

As to the fighting man. Well, we've stood up to Hitler's finest in Africa at bayonet's length—we've beaten the crawling Jap at his own game, jungle fighting.

Long Range View

But still we have those odds which I (or rather the general) mentioned when we look at the long range vista. They are the things which the general brought up in answer to the "buts"—I'll name the "buts" in a second. The point is he showed me why it can't be done tomorrow—why we civilians have to be patient. He showed me what we have to do before we get over that "ridge."

After tomorrow, we can consider: The enemy hasn't the initiative the Americans and British have. When things don't go according to plan, they are likely to "bust." We won't.

The enemy has had its best men in the army a long time—its replacements are not as good as ours will be.

Much of the enemy-held territory has a hostile population which will work with the Allies against the enemy when we move in.

Japan and Germany will fall on critical materials before we will—we can beat them at their own game of "ersatz," too; witness synthetic rubber.

We can manufacture and build faster because we have more to do it with than they have. Our home front is farther away from the battle front—and it is more in sympathy with the government, despite political difficulties.

But remember the "buts."

War Stimulates Changes in Education

One of the many changes which the war has stimulated is the change in education. Education is going to count more after the war. Many boys will come back partially trained in trades and professions which they can follow if they have the additional theoretical and practical instruction necessary to arm them for the stiff competition which is expected.

As a result, college entrance examination requirements will be greatly altered for many of these men will lack the traditional prerequisites. Reform in this field is one of the 11 major objectives, discussed in a report of the commission on liberal education of the Association of American Colleges.

"If an educational program is to be of genuine service to the men and women of the post-war world," the report of the college committee says, "it must perform two functions simultaneously. It must take them as they are and appeal to their immediate desires and special needs, and it must provide for their common and enduring needs in a post-war society."

It will be recalled that the boom after the last war created the coonskin collegian and the flapper coed. The word "collegiate" had a meaning then which took it far afield from the cloister of learning. The crop of students—veterans—will be more serious. They must be taken more seriously. They must have aptitude and achievement tests rather than book-learning examinations; there must be more individualized instruction, more tutorial and seminar methods, special attention must be given to co-ordinated instruction that will aid in the transition from army or industrial life to peacetime community and family relations and the responsibilities of citizenship.

BRIEFS . . . by Baukhage

Foods are "homa canned" says OPA if: (1) they have been canned in a kitchen primarily used for the preparation of meals or to demonstrate the preparation of meals (2) they have been canned in a separate building or shed which a farm house has equipped for canning purposes, if the owner has obtained permission from his local ration board to use such facilities.

Swedish Foreign Minister Christian E. Guenther, declaring that "no neutral power can maintain an absolute balance between warring camps" told an audience at Eskilstuna that Sweden was making "concessions" to Germany "in a higher degree than to the western powers," the Swedish Hoarby radio said in a domestic broadcast reported to the Office of War Information.

A Closet for Your Sewing Equipment

MANY women who have learned to sew for the Red Cross are also sewing for themselves. They are thinking of sewing as a craft and taking pride in their tools Many who do not have space for a sewing room are planning efficient closets to house equipment. Here is a model sewing cupboard from my new book Better Dressmaking.

The cupboard is six and one-half feet high; four feet wide and twenty inches deep. The dress form compartment is five feet six inches high and twenty-four inches wide. The ironing board compartment is four feet ten inches high and eight inches wide. This leaves ample space for shelves for the pressing cushions shown at the top; the sleeve board; iron; water pan and sponge; stout slide-in boxes for findings; notions and patterns; and a lower shelf for fabrics. The construction is of plywood.

Speaking of Sports
by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE American league seems to be in the midst of one of the greatest flag races in its history. At the time this is being written, only six games separate the league leaders from the tail end club.

President Ed Barrow and Manager Joe McCarthy of the Yankees recognize that the war has done an excellent job of leveling off talent and that they are going to fight a harder battle than any Yankee outfit has had since the time of Miller Huggins when they nosed ont the Browns by one length in 1922.

The 1943 pennant race may be even more exciting to watch than in 1940, when the Tigers beat the Indians by a game and the Yankees were right on top of Cleveland.

Ed Barrow is often the forgotten man in speaking of the highly successful Yankees. To McCarthy and the big names on the team roster goes much of the credit. And naturally so. But President Barrow deserves whatever plaudits may be awarded him.

ED BARROW

No. 1 Yankee

Barrow has been with the Yankees since 1921, the year of their first flag. And by this time he is more of a Yankee than any other man. He has been president of the club since Jannary, 1939, following the reorganization after the death of Col. Jacob Enppert.

Barrow is a big man physically. He has a tremendous capacity for enjoying life. Prior to his joining the Yankees, he had a varied and interesting career. He was president of two minor leagues and manager of seven teams, including Wheeling, Patterson, Indianapolis, Toronto, Montreal, the Detroit Tigers and the Boston Red Sox.

His first year in organized baseball brought him unsual success. He was managing Wheeling in 1895. The team finished first in the split season of the Iron and Oil league, then shifted its franchise to the Interstate league and wound up in the top spot of that circuit. Incidentally, Zane Grey, later to become famous as a novelist, was one of Barrow's outfielders that year.

He was still in his teens when he organized and ran his first team, a semi-pro outfit in Des Moines. He first pitched, then moved to the outfield.

The Big Scramble

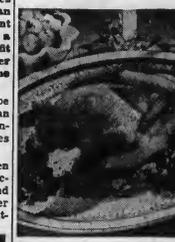
The Yankees haven't won the pennant yet—and they know it as well as the seven other teams of the circuit. But they know, too, that they are going to make it as tough for competition as they possibly can.

McCarthy is quite happy over the mound situation, and he is extremely proud of one Ernie Bonham, whom McCarthy has named as a 25-game winner this season. Bonham almost reached that figure last year with a record of 21 victories and 5 defeats.

McCarthy isn't the only one who is sold on Ernie. Almost any hitter in the league will name him or Tex Hughson of the Red Sox as the best pitcher in the league. Both have their supporters and there's little to choose from either way.

In speaking of Bonham during spring camp, McCarthy said: "Look at his record for last season. He wound up with 21 victories and 5 defeats. Two of the defeats he suffered were by 1 to 0 scores, and both were in late innings. Then take a look at his earned run average, 2.27. That shows we didn't have to get many runs for him to win. Well, this year we'll have to get even less runs for him. Many of the good hitters have gone into service. The percentage favors him."

SPORTS SHORTS



Bill McGowan, American league umpire, names Cecil Travis, formerly of Washington, as most admired by his fellow-arbitrators for gentlemanly conduct. Travis now is in the army.

Bill Tilden never selects a new tennis racquet by its weight. He merely swings it a few times, and if it suits him he takes it.

Fifty games were played in the Southern association before an umpire had to order a player off the premises.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS
by Lynn Chambers

One Whole Chicken Can Be Made Into Two Meals

You're the clever homemaker who saves on chicken by using only half a chicken for roasting. You can have the stuffing, too, by mounding it under the chicken when you roast it in the pan to get all the wonderful flavor of the meat in it.

Most families are so reduced that few homemakers find it necessary to stew or roast a whole chicken for their meals. Instead, it's much smarter to use one half of the chicken for stewing, the other half for roasting, or perhaps in making numerous and delicious dishes using cut up chicken.

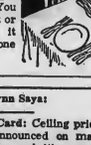
Chicken is a good source of protein and we can use it in place of meat dishes regularly. In addition it's a delicious food that combines well with many other types of food, and goes with most vegetables and fruits in the menu.

Consider, for example, many of the chicken salads which can be made up with fruits or vegetables, and for sandwich fillings. Then, too, you can serve chicken either warm or cold with many vegetables and fruits, as a good start on getting what you need of the seven basic food groups necessary to health.

You probably have your own way of stewing and roasting chicken, but instead of using one whole chicken for either of these methods, split it, use one half for stewing, the other for roasting.

Cut the fowl in half, lengthwise, and cook one half with several carrots, celery, parsley, onion, and seasonings in enough water to cover until tender. Make dumplings, if you like, to go with the stew.

*For roast chicken, cook stewing hen split in half lengthwise until tender. Mound 4 to 6 cups of well-seasoned dressing in bottom of shallow pan, well greased where dressing is placed. Arrange dressing to keep outline of chicken. Press cooked half of chicken cut side down over dressing. Brush chicken with melted fat. Bake uncovered in a hot oven (400 degrees) until chicken is nicely browned, about ½ hour.



A few leftover pieces of chicken either from the roast or from stewing can go into a salad. You'll like this combination with fruit:

Chicken and Fruit Salad Bowl.
(Serves 4 to 6)

1 cup diced chicken
½ teaspoon salt
1½ cups seedless grapes
2 oranges, peeled and sectioned
½ cup blanched almonds
French dressing

Add salt to chicken. Cover salad bowl with shredded lettuce. Arrange grapes over half of top, oranges over other half. Pass french dressing.

Still another way of stretching your meat, or chicken, if there is absolutely enough to go around is to serve it with potato salad. You may like it hot or you may like it cold. Here's one that's hot:

Lynn Says:

The Score Card: Ceiling prices have been announced on many rationed foods, and it's a good idea to consult the lists when you go shopping. It will help you in buying and budgeting.

Most of the times we're concerned with buying foods in season, but it's more important to buy in season now when you're preparing to put up foods for the fall and winter.

In case you don't have your own garden, you might be of help in picking vegetables and fruits to some farmer who does not have enough help. If you are canning, this is a splendid way of getting fresh produce.

Those of you city dwellers who can neither have your own Victory garden or help pick produce should get to the market early to get as fresh produce as possible.

Hot Potato Salad.
(Serves 6)

6 potatoes, diced
3 slices bacon
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
3 tablespoons chopped parsley
2 tablespoons chopped onion
6 tablespoons bacon fat
3 tablespoons vinegar

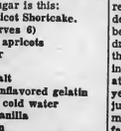
Cook potatoes in jackets until tender. Peel and dice. Cook bacon over low flame until crisp. Remove from pan and break into small pieces and add to hot potato cubes. Add seasoning, parsley and onion. Combine fat and vinegar. Pour over potato mixture and serve hot.

There are still a number of unrationed foods which may fill in nice gaps in menu-making. For example, cottage cheese is an excellent source of both calcium and protein, and you'll enjoy using it in this salad with summer greens:

Cottage Cheese Salad.
(Serves 4 to 5)

2 cups cottage cheese
½ cup sour cream
¼ cup chopped chives
½ cucumber diced
1 tablespoon chopped watercress
1½ teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 hard-cooked eggs, chopped

Mix cottage cheese and sour cream lightly with a fork. Add vegetables and diced eggs, and season with salt and pepper. Serve in mounds, garnished with watercress or lettuce and tomato wedges.



Here's the way to stew chicken and bring out all its delicious flavor. Simmer gently until tender in seasoned water with onion, carrot, parsley and salt.

Cottage Cheese Salad Mold.
(Serves 8 to 10)

3 cups cottage cheese
1 cup crushed pineapple, drained
5 tablespoons mayonnaise
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon mustard
Dash of cayenne
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1½ tablespoons unflavored gelatin
1 cup pineapple juice

Mix cheese, pineapple and mayonnaise. Mix salt, mustard, cayenne and lemon juice; add to cheese and mix lightly. Soften gelatin in pineapple juice and dissolve over hot water. Stir carefully into the cheese mixture. Turn into mold and chill until firm.

A cool, delectable dessert that does not consume points and takes it easy on the sugar is this:

Frozen Apricot Shortcake.
(Serves 6)

1 cup dried apricots
2½ cups water
⅔ cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon unflavored gelatin
1 tablespoon cold water
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 egg, beaten
1 cup heavy cream, whipped
Sponge cake

Cook apricots until tender, about 25 minutes. Add ⅔ of sugar and salt. Heat to boiling, remove from heat and beat to a mush. Soften gelatin in water and add to apricots. Cook. Add remaining ⅓ cup sugar and vanilla to beaten egg and beat until thick. Fold in whipped cream. Arrange layer of sponge cake cut about ¼ inch thick on bottom of refrigerator tray. Spread with apricots and cover with whipped mixture. Freeze. Cut in squares and serve cream side up.

PAINFUL FEET

While the word orthopedic means straightening of the feet, orthopedic physicians are consulted by patients who have any trouble with bones and joints of the entire body. That physicians would be of more help to patients if they studied foot pains more, is admitted by the medical profession.

Dr. Barton

That pains in the feet are very often due to infection—teeth, tonsils — is known and patients with painful feet who are not on their feet much are likely suffering with infection. In fact, some orthopedic physicians state that more than half of painful feet are due to infection. And when we think of the number of bones and joints in the feet, in which arthritis can get started, this is not hard to understand.

However, there are a great many cases of painful feet due to bearing the weight of the body.

In speaking of functional disorders of the feet (that is not due to disease or infection) Dr. D. J. Morton, New York, in the New York State Journal of Medicine, states that the commonest cause of pain in sole of foot is because the inner bone of the sole of the foot, corresponding with big toe, is shorter than the other four bones and the ligaments supporting it are loose or not as tight as with the other bones in sole of foot. Thus pain here is just like pain in any other joint that is being constantly strained. In other words improper weight distribution, too much at this point, causes the pain.

Suggestions for treatment of painful feet are: (1) less work or play and weight bearing, (2) rest, (3) many short rests during the day with the legs and feet well supported at level of hips. (4) removal of all irritation (corns, calluses, warts) which cause the individual to put his weight elsewhere when walking and avoidance of badly fitting shoes, (5) plunging feet first into hot and then into cold water a few times after the day's work is over to improve the circulation.

Dr. Morton gives a helpful working rule which is to assume (in general) that pain at top and sides of the foot is likely caused by the shoe; when pain is on the bottom of the foot, the trouble is generally inside the foot. An X-ray should be taken from top of foot to sole of both feet.

Sulfa Drugs Reduce Influenza Death Rate

Physicians who went through the influenza epidemic of 1918-1919, and witnessed the hopelessness in the treatment of thousands of cases, now look with eager eyes toward future battles with influenza.

It was because influenza went on to pneumonia and bronchopneumonia and the heart already damaged by influenza was unable to sustain the continued fight against pneumonia and bronchopneumonia, that so many victims died. Now that the physician has at hand the sulfa drugs which have reduced the death rate in pneumonia from nearly 10 per cent to about 3 per cent, he is able to fight influenza and pneumonia successfully.

Some interesting figures were released by Dr. Louis I. Dublin of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company. The figures show that there has been a decrease in the death rate of influenza and pneumonia of 65 per cent from 1900 to 1940, that is from 202 per hundred thousand of the population in 1900 to 70 in 1940.

While this is gratifying, the use of the sulfa drugs during 1941 and 1942 has caused an even more rapid decrease.

How remarkable this drop in the death rate really is can only be realized by thinking of the rate of decrease in the years 1900 to 1940, or before the general use of the sulfa drugs. For the general population, the decrease in the death rate from influenza and pneumonia has been at the rate of 1½ a year for the 40 years. During the last two years, judging the whole population by the millions of wage earners and their families of the Metropolitan Insurance company, the death rate has decreased more than 14 per cent a year. In other words, the sulfa drugs have decreased the death rate in influenza and pneumonia over nine times as much each of the last two years as in any of the previous 40 years.

Improved Uniform International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D. Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for June 20

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

JOHN DESCRIBES TRUE CHRISTIANS

LESSON TEXT—I John 2:1-6; 3:13-18; 4:18-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—I John 1:7.

Religion and life go together. To hold the tenets of Christian truth in one's head and not to have them move the heart is to deny the very faith one professes. Yet this is the danger which faces the believer—a temptation before which many have fallen. The result is that much of "what passes for Christianity in these days is very thin stuff, very remote from the original" (Shoemaker).

John was not content with such a weak imitation, and in his writings he set up the true standard of a forgiven and transformed life, living itself out in love and sacrificial service. If we have forgotten what God meant us to be in Christ, or are members of a church which has strayed from the true and living way, this lesson affords an opportunity for penitence and works meet thereunto.

The true Christian life must have

I. Sin Forgiven and Life Transformed (I John 2:1-6).

Not only at the beginning of the Christian life is sin dealt with and put away, but day by day—yes, moment by moment—we have the cleansing power of the blood of our Divine Advocate.

This is of the utmost importance, for God can only use clean channels for the outgoing of His power and grace to the world. We know our own weakness and the defiling presence of the world. But unlike the unregenerate man, we do not submit and go down; we turn to Christ for forgiveness and cleansing.

The transformation of life which thus comes to the believer is shown in obedience to the commandments of God. In the early church there were those who said that if they only believed in Christ as Saviour it made no difference how they lived—and they have their followers in our day.

Be sure of this, the essential thing in Christian profession is not how you talk about Christ, but how you walk in obedience to His commandments.

Real Christianity will cause us to be

II. Hated by the World and Loved by the Brethren (I John 3:13-18).

The world, that is, unregenerate mankind, hates a genuine Christian no matter how kind and loving he may be. Why? "Because the Christian believer gives the non-believer an uncomfortable sense of inferiority. The presence of high Christian ideals in marked contrast to his own selfish policies arouses his anger and resentment" (Douglass).

The presence of a clean, godly life in a community makes every sinner look that much blacker, and the world, the flesh, and the devil will do everything possible to break down and destroy such a testimony.

We, as Christians, should not be surprised that the world hates us. In fact, we should be troubled if it does not hate us, for if our Christianity really means anything, it is distasteful to a God-hating world. Beware if sinners find nothing in your life which distresses them and convicts them of sin.

In the midst of enmity the Christian is not afraid, for he is

III. Indwelt by God and Unafraid in the World (I John 4:15-17).

A sincere confession of Christ as Saviour brings a man into that close relationship to God which is expressed in the words, "God abideth in him, and he in God" (v. 15).

The full depth of meaning of these words is obviously beyond our limited understanding, but we accept the fact by faith and rejoice in it. We recognize that it means that we are brought by our faith in Christ, into the very center of God's love. Christ, the well-beloved Son, who stands in that blessed place, draws us into the circle and there we stand in Him.

God's love showed itself in the giving of His Son as the Redeemer of the world. It was and is unselfish and sacrificial devotion to the eternal welfare of those who merited only judgment. We do not love until we reflect that quality in our lives.

Such love casts out fear. Fellowship is impossible in an atmosphere of fear, but love rules it out. In Christ we realize that God first loved us, and then our hearts go out in warm devotion to him.

Not only does the Christian no longer fear the day of judgment, but he is unafraid in the present evil world. This is not because of his own strength or ability, but because through faith in Christ he is "in God," and "as He is, so are we in this world" (v. 17). No more perfect or blessed ground of assurance could possibly be provided. Let us recognize our position in Him, and be strong and unafraid.

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

"TOWN AND FARM IN WARTIME"

A weekly news digest from the Rural Press Section of the OWI News Section.

Lower Meat Prices

Effective June 21, meat prices at retail will be lowered from 3 cents to 7 cents a pound by order of the OPA. New prices for cured and processed pork will go into effect on July 5. Reductions in price are smaller on cheaper cuts and larger on the more expensive. As in the case of the rollback of prices on butter, the lowering of meat prices will not directly affect the farm producer. Subsidies, which begin June 7, will be paid to anyone who slaughters 4,000 pounds of meat or more per month.

Some typical new prices (for Zone 4—N. D., Minn., Neb., Kansas, Okla., Texas, parts of Wis., Iowa, and Mo.) are; round steak, Grade A, bone-in; 40 cents down 5 cents; rib roast, Grade A, 34 cents, down 7 cents; chuck roast, Grade A, bone-in, 28, down 3 cents; hamburger, 26 cents, down 4 cents; pork chops, center cut, 38 cents, down 4 cents; lamb loin chops, Grade A; 57 cents down 6 cents; veal cutlet, Grade A, 44 cents; sliced bacon, Grade A, 42 cents, down 5 cents.

Write To Men In Iceland

"American soldiers in Iceland are not getting nearly enough mail from home", said Chaplain (Captain) Peter E. Cullom, who recently returned to the U. S., after two years of duty with Icelandic garrisons. "In spite of the fact that the army delivers the mail with promptness and regularity to every army post in Iceland, folks at home are not taking full advantage of this service", Chaplain Cullom said.

Ration Reminder

Gasoline—"A" book coupons No. 6, good for four gallons each, outside the eastern gasoline shortage area. Within the East Coast shortage area, "A" book coupons No. 5 good for three gallons each, must last throug July 21. "B" and "C" coupons cut to 2-½ gallons in shortage area.

Sugar—Coupon No. 13 good for 5 lbs. through August 15. Coupons No. 15 and 16 are good through October 31 for 5 lbs. each for home canning purposes. Housewives may apply to their local ration boards if necessary.

Coffee—Stamp No. 24 (1 lb.) is good through June 30.

Fuel Oil—Period 5 coupons valid in all zones until September 30.

Shoes—Stamp No. 18 (1 pair) becomes valid June 16.

Meats, etc.—Red stamps J, K, L, M, good through June 30. N becomes valid June 20.

Processed foods—Blue stamps K, L, M, continue good through July 7.

More Farm Machinery

A total of 300,000 tons of carbon steel, with other materials in proportion, has been allocated to the farm machinery program for the quarter beginning July 1. An additional 200,00 tons of steel have also been approved for each of the three quarters from October 1, 1943, to July 1, 1944. During the third quarter of this year, special emphasis will be given to the manufacturer of harvesting machinery for this year's crops. The whole farm machinery program has been stepped up.

Ice Box Prices

Retail price ceiling on new ice boxes have been established by OPA by models and states. Present prices will be lowered in many cases. Three sets of retail ceiling have been provided; (1) sales by ice companies and their stores, prices ranging from $26.75 to $75.00 delivered; (2) mail order sales—$18.95 to $59.95; (3) all other sales at retail—$30.75 to $88.75.

Coffee By Mail

Coffee drinkers who order their blends by mail may now "pay" for the purchase by enclosing detached ration stamps with the order rather than the entire ration book, OPA has announced. Formerly, consumers were required to forward their war ration book to the retailer or wholesaler for removal of stamps.

Inspection Requlements Changed

Tire inspections for commercial motor vehicles now may be made every 5,000 miles or every six months, whichever occurs first, ODT has announced. Previously, commercial vehicles had to have tire inspection every 5,000 miles or every 60 days whichever occurred first.

Data On Prisoners

American soldiers officially reported as prisoners of war in enemy countries to date total 17,083, the War Department has announced. Of these, 11,307 are held by Japan; 3,312 by Germany, and 2,464 by Italy. However, these reports are incomplete. Information in the hands of the War Department indicates that the basic diet of an American soldier in German prison camps is largely potatoes, cabbage, fish, and an indefinite amount of meat.

To Substitute Tires

Farmers needing farm implement or front wheel tractor tires will be permitted to purchase suitable substitutes when they are unable to find a dealer with tires designed expressly for their purpose, the OPA has announced. Dealers may also sell passenger car owners tires and tubes of a slightly different size than is called for by the rationing certificate.

Leather For Civilians

Manufacture of many civilian leather products, which was prohibited after June 1, can be continued through 1943 out of manufacturers inventories, under a recent WPB amendment. Among products affected are dress gloves and mittens, brief cases, new upholstery, radio cases, pocketbooks, handbags, cigar and cigarette cases, key cases, tobacco pouches, watch straps and dog furnishings.

Electricity To Farms

Rural electrification loans to 26 systems in 18 states have been made to a total of $1,790,000 for immediate extension of service to more than 1,000 farms qualifying under present WPB regulations permitting connections to farms producing livestock, dairy and poultry products.

Gas Coupons Changed

A new "T7" gasoline coupon, which replaces the present "T" coupon, will become valid for use on July 1. The old type of "T" coupon will be invalid on and after July 1, except in the northeastern shortage area where it will be used through July 25. OPA expects the change in design to help take up "slack" mileage and remove potential sources of black market gasoline.

Materials For Underwear

Materials for knit underwear for men, women, and children will be made available by an action of WPB. Manufacturerers have been assured of supplies of cotton yarn, thread, fabrics and other materials to meet essential civilian requirements.

New Pipeline Approved

A 383-mile, 16-inch pipeline from Sundown, Texas, to Drumright, Oklahoma, having an initial capacity of 54,000 barrels of crude oil daily, has been approved by the War Production Board upon the recommendation of the Petroleum Administrator for War. Construction is expected to begin early in October, 1943, and should be in operation sometime in March, 1944, the Administrator, added, providing that materials and workmen are available on schedule. The pipeline will serve to provide middle western refineries with additional supplies of West Texas crude oil, thus helping to relieve the national oil shortage.

"B" Mileage Cut"

Maximum mileage of "B" gasoline ration books has been reduced to 300 miles per month in the northeast shortage area—and no additional mileage will be allowed under any circumstances unless the applicant is, in a preferred occupation, for example, a doctor, ambulance driver, firefighter, or policeman.

Must Report Foreign Holdings

Every American citizen who had an interest in any property in a foreign country on May 31, 1943, must file a special report on Form 544-500, obtainable at Federal Reserve banks. Citizens in enemy-occupied countries, or in foreign service with the armed forces, or whose property in foreign countries is worth less than $10,000 are not required to make this report. The information so obtained will be of great importance in the formulation of post-war financial policies involving this country and foreign nations. The report applies both to tangible and intangible property.

Looking Forward in Adair County

How farmers in Adair county, Kentucky, are pushing to the front is told weekly by County Agent R. B. Rankin. Here's one of his weekly reports, much condensed: Rollin Willis has a good crop of barley, free from smut, due to treating the seed before sowing last fall. Last year's crop was full of smut. A. W. Paxton and J. D. Lowe are among those who seeded alfalfa this spring and got good stands. Sam Barbee has alfalfa five years old that is producing better than ever. Guy Feeris' Balbo rye has been left for seed, after being pastured heavily. Allen Stephens bought 12 shoats that averaged 100 pounds, and took them to market 62 days later at an average weight of 232 lbs. L. G. Keltner ha 26 good lambs from 16 ewes. Joe Henson raised 100 chicks out of 102 started. O. E. Buster's vetch, sowed last August, has vines five feet long.

WHAT IS ON THE MENU FOR YOUR HERD THIS SUMMER?

Prepared by Lynn Copeland

Did your pastures withstand the heat last summer and did your cows all hold up in production during July and August?

Good pasture is the cheapest food for dairy cattle. It does not require nearly as much labor as the growing harvesting of other feed crops. Pasture grasses are the natural food for cows. When plenty of good grass is available, health, vigor and production are more easily maintained. Kentucky DHIA records show that the cost of producing a pound of butterfat is approximately 50% less when cows are on good pasture compared with dry lot feeding.

However, even on good pastures, heavy milking cows cannot consume enough to furnish all the nutrients required. Later on, pastures dry up, the grass becomes tough and low in digestible nutrients. Supplement feeding is necessary to hold up production and to keep cows from losing flesh.

Hay as a Supplement to Pasture

When pastures dry up, become tough and less nutritous, the cows should be fed all the good hay they will clean up. The best time to feed hay is after the evening milking before the cows return to pasture or to feed it in open racks where shade is available.

Supplementary Pasture

One of the most satisfactory ways of supplementing permanent pastures is with temporary pastures: Lespedeza is one of the best for this purpose. Sudan grass is also suitable in some sections and in the fall and spring the cereal crops, especially Balbo ryé, are excellent. Make plans now to have plenty of supplementary pasture. It will save feed and also keep your dairy cows in good condition for fall and winter milk production.

Summer Silage

Silage fed in the summer is a very good and dependable pasture supplement. By ensiling excess grass or the first cutting of alfalfa and feeding it when pastures are short, a good supply of succulent feed is available. Corn or sorghum silage left over from winter feeding can also be fed out in the summer with excellent results.

Grains

A high producing cow needs grain regardless of how good the pasture and as the summer season advances, grain feeding becomes essential to maintain production. The protein content of the ration will vary depending on the quality of the pasture. Ranging from 10 to 12% on good pasture in early summer, 13 to 15% on medium pasture and 16 to 18% on poor pasture. Feed Jerseys and Guernseys 1 lb. of grain to each 4 to 5 lbs. of milk produced and the larger dairy breeds, 1 lb. grain to each 5 to 6 of milk produced, depending on how much the cows are milking and how succulent the pastures are. Increase the amount of feed to heavy milkers and to all the cows if the pasture is poor. Lower the amount to low producers and to all the cows if the pasture is abundant.

Remember, the menu of your cows will largely determine how much profit you will have for the menu of your own table.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox, Jr. Manila had fallen and our naval base at Cavite had been wiped out, when the PT boats took their final crack at the Japs off Bataan. March first General MacArthur took a ride in one of the boats, and everyone knew something was up, because the Philippines couldn't hold out much longer. Lieut. Kelly is speaking.

CHAPTER IX

"On March 10 Bulkeley made his usual trip to see MacArthur; this time he brought along all his plans and charts for the trip. The General went over and approved them, and also told Admiral Rockwell and his chief of staff that they were going along, which was the first they had known of the trip—they had thought we were going to China. There was also an ominous bit of news—some big Jap formation was reported coming down the west coast of Luzon in our direction. If it was true, it could only be the convoy bringing General Yamashita and his reinforcements. General MacArthur told Bulkeley we might be leaving very soon, and to come back the next day.

"That would be the eleventh of March. Bulkeley went over early in the morning and returned to us at noon. He called in not only me but the other officers, Akers, Cox, and Schumacher, and for the first time showed them copies of our secret orders and the charts he had worked out for our route. He made the point that we should all keep together, but if one broke down, the rest would go on, leaving it to make its way the best it could."

"If we met the enemy, we were to avoid them if possible. But if they gave chase and were gaining on us so that an attack was necessary, the 41 boat, in which he would carry the General, his wife, and his son, would turn and run, and my boat, since I was second in command, would lead the attack to give the others time to escape.

"The last thing he told us was that we were leaving that very night. He left us hard at work on last-minute preparations but would return soon to complete his own.

"We didn't tell the men what we were up to or where we were leaving Corregidor," continued Lieutenant Kelly, but they got their orders to dump that landing-force equipment, to load all spare parts on the boats, move the crew's mess gear back into the ship's galley, and pile the decks with drums of gas.

"And while we were doing it, who should walk in but Nat Floyd of the New York Times, exactly the last guy in the world we wanted to see. Sure, we liked him. He said he'd been up to the lines with the army, and then on a hunch, no particular reason, thought he'd drop in on us and see if we had any news.

"Then Bulkeley and I went into a huddle. Here Nat was. And bound to get suspicious of the activity. After we'd gone, the story would be almost sure to get out.

"'He's a pretty nice guy,' I said. 'Don't suppose we could take him with us, do you?'

"'Well,' said Bulkeley. 'I've got to go along now. But if Nat should happen to stow away in the lazaret, and we didn't find him until we were out to sea, why then the story certainly wouldn't get out, would it?'

"'And do you know, that's just what happened. But in the meantime there were other things on my mind. Mostly it was how I was going to get hold of Peggy. There was no telephone at the hospital. She'd said she would phone me sometime between six and seven o'clock today about that date of ours on the fifteenth.

"But there was a lot of traffic over the signal-corps field telephone, and she might not get to use it until almost seven. And I was due to pick up my passengers and be gone forever by 6:30 tonight. And I'd never get to say how much I liked her and what a swell, brave kid she was, and good-by.

"So I sat down and tried to write it in a letter, which I could leave at Corregidor on my way out, and which she would get when she got back from duty in the lines, and then at least would understand.

"I had just finished it about 2:30 and put it in my pocket when they came tagging me for a telephone call on that signal-corps phone. It was Peggy—her duty hours had been changed, and she was afraid if she waited until seven to call I might be out on patrol, and she might miss me. She just wanted to tell me she'd been able to fix everything for our date on the fifteenth, and was that date all right with me, could I make it?

"'No,' I said. The phone was on the wall in the Philippine army shack, and the shack was crowded with soldiers—in addition to all the guys probably listening in on the line.

"'Well, she said, maybe she could change it for the sixteenth, if that would be better for me.

"'It wouldn't be any better,' I said. 'Nothing would be any better.'

"'Well,' she said, and she sounded a little mad, 'what is this, anyway?'

"'I guess it's good-by, Peggy,' I said.

"Then there was a long silence, and when she spoke again I almost thought it was someone else, her voice was so changed. Where are you going?' she asked, very low. 'Can you tell me?'

"'No,' I said.

"'Can you tell me if you're coming back?'

"'No,' I said. 'I can't tell you that.'

"'Then I guess it's really good-by,' she said, and her voice sounded flat and a long way off. 'But it's been awfully nice, hasn't it?'

"'Listen, Peggy, I've written you a letter—' only just then I heard the connection break. It seemed a couple of generals wanted to talk to each other. It was quite a while before I got it back again, and they told me she had waited fifteen minutes and had then gone. I've always hoped what the generals had to say to each other was important.

"Of course we weren't engaged. I didn't have a picture of her. In fact, the only thing I had was a few lines she'd scribbled on a piece of paper a few weeks before. We'd been idly talking about how we hoped to get out of the islands and agreed, half in joke, that whichever of us got out first would write the family of the other one of those reassuring letters about how wonderful life was on Bataan and how well and happy the other one had looked.

"So, half in joke, she'd scratched the address of her married sister in San Francisco on the back of an old envelope. This I still had, and I intended to write her, and send it out by the plane which took MacArthur, telling her what a swell girl her kid sister was.

"'Then I guess it's really good-by,' she said."

"Kelly's 34 boat was right on time," said Bulkeley. "We in the 41 boat picked up our passengers at Corregidor and met him and the other two boys at the turning light just outside the mine field at seven o'clock to the minute. We had twenty passengers in all in our four boats. With me in the 41 boat were General and Mrs. MacArthur, their little boy, and his nurse and a few generals. Kelly in the 34 boat had, to start with, Admiral Rockwell, two colonels, and an army aviation captain. When one of the other boats later broke down, Kelly picked up a few more generals.

"But rank made no difference. Washington had ordered MacArthur to bring out the most valuable of his men, and so they were all specialists—there was even a staff sergeant, who was a technician, along with us, while thirty-odd generals were left behind on Bataan.

"We started out single file, my boat as flagship setting the pace for the other three. First we went fifty miles straight out to sea in the deepening twilight. We'd hoped to get out unnoticed, but suddenly we saw a light glimmer and glow on one of the Japanese islands. It was a signal fire-warning to the mainland that they'd seen us pass. If they had seen it on Luzon, that meant trouble for us—maybe bombers at dawn, maybe destroyers later on in the day. By eleven o'clock we made out the outline of Apo Island against the stars (there was no moon) and checked our navigation, which we were doing entirely by compass and chart. MacArthur and General Sutherland were pleased with the way it was going."

"I can't say that Admiral Rockwell was," said Kelly—"maybe because he knew more about the seas than the generals did. I hadn't wanted to worry him, so I hadn't mentioned the fact that ours was the only one of the four boats which hadn't been overhauled, and was so full of carbon that we couldn't make much speed until the carbon was burned out.

"As you know, we'd intended to make a good speed, but I found my boat wouldn't quite do it. Pretty soon we were lagging fifty yards behind, then, after a while, two hundred. The Admiral didn't mention this for some time. But finally he said:

"'Don't you think we're getting a little far apart?'

"'We'll close in gradually,' I said. And I tried to, but finally we were so far behind Bulkeley's flagship we couldn't see it with the naked eye.

"'I sent a whispered message to the engine room, ordering them to disconnect the throttle, and to push the carburetors up with their hands as far as they would go. We now had on every possible ounce of power, but the Admiral still wasn't satisfied.

"'We're closing pretty slowly,' he complained.

"'Privately, I doubted that we were closing at all, but I only said, 'No use pushing her too hard, sir.'

"But about five minutes later we really were closing. Bulkeley, noticing we were pretty far behind, had reduced his speed. But, with my throttle disconnected, I couldn't reduce mine, and it took me about a minute to get a message down there telling the engineers to take their hands off the carburetor levers and reconnect them with the controls on the bridge. During this minute we not only gained on Bulkeley's boat, but overtook it and went roaring madly past.

"In the darkness I could see the Admiral had squared around and was giving me a doubtful look. I could tell he thought he was riding with a madman, and I decided he would worry less if I told him the truth—that our maximum speed in this boat was something under forty knots. Any Japanese destroyer could easily make this maximum of ours, as the Admiral very well knew. But all he said was 'My God!' very softly to himself.

"It happened that we were just passing an island. The Admiral glanced over.

"'How far are we from shore, Kelly?'

"'About four miles, sir.'

"'Looks farther than that to me. Take a bow-and-beam bearing.'

"'Aye, aye, sir,' I said. But of course I didn't have any instruments. So, making the 45-degree angle with two fingers, I sighted along them to a point ahead. When we came just abeam of this point, since we knew our own speed, it would give us roughly our distance from shore—very roughly. The Admiral noticed me sighting along my fingers.

"'Don't you have a pelorus?' he said, sharply.

"'No, sir,' I said.

"'Hm-m—, I suppose the flagship has better means?'

"'No, sir,' I said. 'They don't.'

"'How in hell do you navigate?'

"'By guess and by God, sir,' I said.

"'My God!' said the Admiral, and this time he didn't say it so softly. 'I hope,' he added wistfully, 'that we get there.'

"At four o'clock in the morning, my engines suddenly stopped," recalled Lieutenant Kelly. "I knew the strainers were clogged with wax and rust, and it would take half an hour to clean them, which I explained to the Admiral, who was watching the other three boats disappear over the horizon.

"'What time will we get to the rendezvous?'

"I made a fast mental calculation. 'About 8:30, sir.'

"Dawn, as we both knew, would come at seven, and with it—if the mainland had seen that island signal fire—Japanese planes, looking for us.

"'That's an hour and a half later than I like to be out,' said the Admiral. Our plans, of course, called for running only at night, and laying up by day in the Cuyo Island group, with a general rendezvous in a harbor of one of the central islands for our start at sunset.

"There are thirty or forty islands in the Cuyo group, and just before dawn we began to make out the first ones—tiny mounds on the horizon ahead and around us. The flagship had the only detailed chart of them; all I had was a large-sized map of the Philippines, and on this the Cuyoa looked like a cluster of some forty-odd flyspecks.

"When the Admiral asked how in the world we—without navigation instruments or chart—expected to make a proper landfall on the particular flyspeck that we all had selected as rendezvous, I explained we had provided for that; I knew its general location, and from Bulkeley's chart I had drawn a pencil sketch of this island. But again he was skeptical.

"'It was eight o'clock (no planes as yet) before we saw what we thought might be the right one; as we drew nearer, the Admiral agreed that the hills and cove were exactly like my sketch, but when we entered the cove, it was empty. We circled the island—no sign of the other three boats.

"'My God,' said the Admiral, 'what's happened to the General? We arrive, limping in late, and the others aren't here! Where can they be?'

SAMMY JAY TELLS HIS TROUBLES TO REDDY FOX

SAMMY JAY could think of nothing but the terrible fright he had had at Farmer Brown's corncrib. He had thrust his bill through a crack for a few grains of corn when something had seized his bill and hung on. Sammy didn't have the least bit of doubt that it was a trap of some kind set by Farmer Brown's Boy. He flew down to the Green Forest to think it over and plan some way to get even with Farmer Brown's Boy. As he sat there muttering to himself along came Reddy Fox. For a wonder Reddy saw Sammy before Sammy saw him.

Reddy grinned. "Sammy certainly has got something on his mind," thought Reddy. Then he said aloud: "Hello, Sammy! What's the matter? You look as if you had the stomachache and the headache and a few other aches."

"Matter enough, Reddy Fox! Matter enough!" snapped Sammy. Then, because he felt that he just had to tell someone, he told Reddy all about his terrible fright that morning.

"It was a trap," said Sammy. "It was some kind of a trap set by Farmer Brown's Boy. Just as if he couldn't spare a few grains of corn when he has got so much! I—I—I'd like to—to peck his eyes out! That's what I'd like to do!"

Sammy said that because it was the most dreadful thing he could think of, but he didn't really mean it. Reddy knew it and grinned, for he also knew that Sammy didn't dare go near enough to Farmer Brown's Boy to more than scream at him. All the time he had been listening Reddy had sat with his head cocked on one side, which is a way he has when he's thinking. Inside he was laughing, for Reddy knows a lot about traps and about Farmer Brown's Boy and he didn't believe that Farmer Brown's Boy ever would set a trap in such a queer place as a crack in the wall of a corncrib.

"That was a terrible experience, Sammy Jay, and I don't wonder that you were frightened. Are you going up there tomorrow morning?"

"What?" screamed Sammy. "Going up there again? What do you take me for? I guess I don't need but one lesson of that kind. There's plenty to eat in the Green Forest and on the Green Meadows without running any such risk as that. No, sir, you won't catch me around Farmer Brown's corncrib again very soon; not if my name is Sammy Jay!"

"You are wise, very wise," replied Reddy gravely. "It is always wise to keep out of danger." And with this Reddy trotted on up the Lone Little Path, and inside his red head were busy thoughts. Reddy had made up his mind that there was something very queer about Sammy Jay's fright and he meant to find out about it. He would be on hand at the first peep of day the next morning to see what was going on around Farmer Brown's corncrib.

And all day long Sammy Jay flew about through the Green Forest telling everyone who would listen how Farmer Brown's Boy had tried to trap him. Late that afternoon he visited the Old Orchard and told his story all over again to Chatterer, the Red Squirrel, and Chatterer didn't so much as smile until after Sammy had left. Then he threw himself on the ground and rolled over and over and laughed until his sides ached.

"H-mm," said Reddy Fox thoughtfully, as unseen by Chatterer he watched from behind the old stone wall, "that red-coated busybody knows something about that trap in the corncrib. I certainly will be on hand early tomorrow morning."

Shopkeeper Took Next Best Thing Offered Him

Wishing to dispose of his dog, a man who was moving into the city went to the local pet shopkeeper.

"Do you think you can sell this dog for $200?" he asked of the man.

"But, sir, that type of dog is not worth that much," was the reply of the astonished agent.

But the other insisted, and left. Some weeks later he returned and, asking about his dog, was told that it had been sold.

"Do you really mean to tell me that you got the $200 that I asked?" he inquired.

"Well, not exactly," said the shopkeeper. "You see, I exchanged it for two $100 cats."

Lesson Frugal Manager Taught Stuck With Driver

The works manager of a certain railway company had a reputation for meanness.

The pet bee in his bonnet was oil and waste. He was always driving home the fact that if every employee was careful with oil and cotton waste, much money would be saved.

One day he was having a few words with a very new driver.

"Tell me," he ordered, "what would you do if you were driving one day, and saw an express thundering towards you on the same line?"

The novice thought hard. Then: "I'd grab the oilcan, I'd grab the waste—and I'd jump!"

In the Navy a floor is a "deck," doors are "bulkheads," downstairs is "below," and a cigarette is a "Camel." At least, Camel is the favorite cigarette among Navy men, as it is among men in the Army, Marines, and Coast Guard. (Based on actual sales records from service men's stores.) And a carton of Camels is a favorite gift. Though there are now Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

Big Records Made by Kentucky Cows

Two registered Holstein-Friesian cows in the dairy herd of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, Lexington, have recently completed official production records of more than 475 pounds of butterfat, The Holstein-Friesian Association of America announces.

The higher producer of the two is Enchantress Segis with a record of 515 pounds of butterfat and 12,464 pounds of milk. This is nearly three times the production of the average dairy cow in this nation. The record was made in 365 days on twice-a-day milking and at the age of 3 years 2 months.

The other high producer was Guybelle Lyons with 477 pounds of butterfat and 14,445 pounds of milk, made in 365 days on twice a day milking and at the age of 5 years 6 months.

Testing was supervised by the University of Kentucky in cooperation with The Holstein-Friesian Association of America.

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

A Pledge

The Democratic nominee for Governor will be selected by the voters of the Commonwealth on August seventh. Each of the candidates has presented to the voters a detailed platform and on Primary Day a choice must be made between these platforms.

I hereby pledge myself to support to the fullest extent the platform of the Governor chosen by the people. As I see it, no other platform is necessary or desirable on the part of a candidate for Lieutenant Governor.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"A lot of storekeepers in town are worrying about being able to get help these days, Judge. Men are mighty scarce and gettin' more so all the time."

"I know. Even the big companies are having quite a job getting them. Yep, and they need 'em too. Take the beverage distilling companies for example...they need a lot of manpower. Though they're not making whiskey any more, they're doing a 24-hour-a-day job of turning out alcohol for gun powder and synthetic rubber for the government.

"Makes me think back to the days before repeal when a powerful number of people were making liquor, too...only they were a bunch of law-flouting criminals doing it behind closed doors. And the government wasn't collecting a billion dollar excise tax either. Ever stop to wonder where the government could get all its war alcohol today if it weren't for the beverage distillers?"

Kenton County Community Cannery at Simon-Kenton

The Community Cannery Advisory Council composed of representatives from all sections of Kenton County met at the Simon Kenton School Friday night, June 18, and aided in making plans for Victory Gardeners, farmers, and others to use the Community Cannery at the Simon Kenton school. The cannery facilities will be ready for use approximately June 28, and are being housed in a special building 24x40 that is being constructed by the Kenton County Board of Education. The steam for the cannery will be suplied by a steam roiler furnished by the Kenton County Fiscal Court. The cannery facilities have a capacity of approximately 300 cans of food per hour, and will accomodate about 20 families at one time.

At the Advisory Council meeting, Mr. J. A. Caywood, Superintendent of Kenton County Schools, explained the purpose of the cannery and that it is being established by the Kenton County Board of Education in cooperation with the State Department of Vocational Education and the U. S. Office of Education. He told the Advisory Council that the facilities of the cannery will be available to all communities of Kenton County organized with the aid of the teachers of vocational agriculture and home economics of the Simon Kenton School.

Miss Helen R. Gardiner, teacher of vocational home economics of the Simon Kenton School, brought before the group the importance of having a sufficient supply of food in the home to insure good health for the family. A part of this supply of food may come from surplus foods which are canned, dried, brined, sulfured, pickled, and preserved this summer. She also explained the operation of the cannery and pointed out that it is possible to can at one time in the cannery all of one product which a family may need for the entire winter.

Dr. H. C. White and Mr. Edward M. Kerler from the County Board of Health brought to the attention of the group the importance of handling food to be canned in the cannery in a sanitary manner, and the necessity of keeping the cannery clean.

Mr. C. B. Gordon, teacher of vocational agriculture, discussed the importance of canning every bit of surplus food, since 40% or more of the commercially canned food will go to our Allies and fighting men. This means that one will not be able to go to the grocery and purchase commercilly canned foods as in the past. He and the Advisory Council set up policies to be followed by community groups using the cannery. Mr. Gordon also outlined the following suggestions for people who wish to use the Community Cannery:

"Be sure to obtain information in advance concerning the preparation of produce and time to report at the cannery. This information may be obtained by attending an organization meeting to be held for each community and by contacting the community canning chairman in your community.

"Food either purchased or grown may be brought to the cannery for canning.

"Persons using the cannery will prepare the produce and put it in cans under the direction of the teachers of home economics and agriculture.

"Cans may be secured through the community secretary-treasurers. A charge of 5¼ to 6 cents a can covers the cost of the can and use of the cannery. These charges are to cover the cost of fuel, water, electricity, and labor for firing the boiler. The cannery is not operated for profit.

"The use of the Simon Kenton Community Cannery is regarded as home canning, and thus, no ration points are required for food canned there.

"It is suggested that individuals and families wishing to use the Community Cannery join the community group being organized nearest them, and bring their produce to the cannery at the same time. There is no minimum as to the amount of food which may be canned, but, by consolidating small amounts, the cannery can operate nearer capacity and thus provide the greatest amount of service to all groups using the cannery. This will also aid in keeping the cost of operating the cannery at a low level."

The Advisory Council consists of Mrs. Edwin Miller and Mrs. Frank Connor from the Visalia-Ryland communities; Mrs. Lewis M. Gabriel, Mrs. Malcolm Oliver.

Fuel Oil Applications Should Be In By July

Only occupants of oil heated homes who act promptly in returning applications for next year's fuel oil rations to their War Price and Rationing Board will benefit fully from plans to assure them adequate supplies in their fuel tanks before winter sets in, R. E. Brugh, chairman of the Boone County War Price and Rationing Board, declared today.

The board has made special arrangements for renewing heating oil rations before July 1 to enable householders to get deliveries weeks, even months, in advance of cold weather, said R. E. Brugh. But this cannot be accomplished, he warned, unless consumers fill out their forms at once and mail them back to the board.

The application form contains only five questions, all of which can be answered easily in a few minutes. Cooperation of the public in getting the application in quickly will be of inestimable value to the board in getting new coupons sheets issued during June, according to the chairman.

In order to make early tank fill-ups possible, the OPA has made about one-third of the coupons in each consumer's ration valid on July 1, even though last year's heating period system will be continued in modified form.

Coupons valid on July 1 will include:

1. Period 1 coupons.

2. "Consumer's reserve" coupons constituting approximately one-sixth of the year's ration. These will remain valid throughout the year.

3. "Change making" coupons, which will make up a substantially larger proportion of the year's ration than last year. They will also remain valid throughout the year.

R. E. Brugh pointed out that ration holders in filling their tanks this summer should use their Period 1 coupons together with any Period 5 coupons remaining from the present ration. Householders with large storage facilities may also draw upon their "reserve" coupons on the new sheets. Otherwise these "reserve" coupons, which will be valid through the year, should be held as a cushion for use later in the winter. "Change making" coupons should also be used only after the Period 1 coupons are exhausted, so that the ration holder will at all times have some of these small-denomination coupons on hand with which to "make change" when deliveries are made.

Retention of the periods will permit prompt and equitable upward and downward adjustment of rations in line with supply and weather conditions, R. E. Brugh said. The periods have also been found to assist consumers in budgeting their ration. By identifying a portion of their ration with a fixed period of time, consumers have been better able to get maximum comfort under a rationing program to conserve fuel. The heating period plan was retained also because it limits coupon accumulation and prevents a run on supplies.

R. E. Brugh emphasized that any oil purhased this summer by a consumer with new coupons is a part of his ration for next year—October 1, 1943, to September 30, 1944. It should not be consumed for hot water or other purposes during this summer.

Training Class To Be Held At New Bethel Church June 23rd.

The W M S of New Bethel Church met at the church Wednesday afternoon, June 16 in regular session with the President, Mrs. Relda Powers presiding. Training Offered By Army Signal Corps

COLUMBUS, O., June—An extensive program for training civilians as inspectors in factories producing vital war equiment, including military telphone, radio and radar apparatus, has been launched by the Army Signal Corps, headquarters of the Fifth Command announced today.

With several thousand women already employed as Signal Crops inspectors, it is expected that the majority of the new trainees will also be women. Training will also be provided for men outside of the Selective Service age brackets and for those disqualified for military service.

The training couse for the inspectors, an intensive 8-hour-day, 6-day-week schedule for a 6 weeks, includes an outline of the organization of the Signal Corps inspector in the factory as a link between the production line and the battle line.

The entrance salary for the inspection jobs, which is paid during the 6-week training period as well as the individual's ability and available vacancies.

Indicating the great importance of inspection work in the production of communication equiment, an improperly soldered connection or an imperfectly calibrated tuning unit may vause a break in the critical chain of communications which can bring up battle reinforcements or warn of an enemy attack in a decisive moment in combat operations.

Applicants for the inspection training should apply at the nearest offices of the Civil Service Commission where selection will be made by means of interviews and simple aptitude test. In most cases, individuals employed under the Signal Corps plan will recive their training in the geographical areas of their homes and will, whenever possible, be assinged to duty in plants within their home areas. It was pointed out that the inspectoin jobs offered physically-handicapped persons an excellent opportunity to perform war service.

99 Tractor Operators Cooperate In County

Ninty nine tractor owners assisted, or were available to assist, neighbors in getting their land prepared for planting in recent weeks according to H. R. Porkner, County Agent. Several of these owners were able to do all the emergency plowing and discing in their immediate communities.

Neighborhood leaders and tractor owners cooperated in making the survey of the county. Many of these owners like O. M. Rogers and Howard Lizer of Burlington had planned only to do their own work but when called upon showed a splendid spirit of cooperation by assisting in doing emergency work helpful to the war effort. The result is that many more acres of food crops will be produced.

The results of this cooperative customwork by power equipment on emergency farm jobs is tremendous. Without farmers cooperating with neighbors in use of power equipment many acres of land could not have been prepared for planting—eight acres of corn land prepared by an extra days use of this equipment means 240 bushels more corn raised—means 13 more 200 pound hogs produced, more milk, poultry, or beef produced—means more people on the home front and on the fighting front will be fed in order to bring a quicker and more decisive Victory. We are all in the same fight—Some are assigned the job of squeezing the trigger on the firing line, others making the implements of war—our job, equally important, is producing the food that is necessary for those on the other jobs to do their work and to do it well.

Home Grown Food Supply Valued

Homemakes Clubs in the county studied "Stretching the Family Dollar" at local meetings during June. The value of the home grown food supply came to light in the records, kept by members, of foods used during the preceding month. Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent, cites a record kept by Mrs. Huey Aylor, a member of the Bullittsville Club, which valued home grown foods used on her table during May at $42.

Mrs. Aylor's family varies in size from two to six according to frequent visits of children and grand children. The foods recorded included: milk, butter, eggs, pork, beef, poultry, home canned and stored fruits and vegetables; as well as the miscellaneous items: meal, honey, lard, and fresh garden vegetables. The grocery bill for the month was less than $7.00 which paid for staple foods and "extras", not available on the farm.

Mrs. Aylor expressed surprise at the total value of her home grown foods, and stated that she could not have fed her family so nutritiously if she has been expected to buy food at current prices in the stores.

Mrs. Moore also calls attention to ration points saved by this home grown foods budget. Unused ration stamps are not "wasted" stamps, but mean that the rationed foods can be further shared in the overall ration program.

Every pound of food produced and every quart of food canned will be highly valued by rural and urban families alike this year.

Attend a Canning Demonstration, schedule is announced elsewhere in this paper.

Sgt. Lewis Shields, who is stationed at Camp Robinson, Ark. spent several hours in Cincinnati enroute from Pikeville, Ky. where he had been on a business trip. Mrs. Julia Rouse, Miss Georgia Rouse, Mrs. J. B. Johnson and Miss Maxil Falls spent the time with him between trains.

Walton To Have Tie Manufacturing Company

Through the united efforts of the citizens and businessmen, of Walton, there is to be located within the town a Company to be known as the Walton Manufacturing Co. The new concern is to manufacture ties and is to be housed in the building, know locally, as the Cluster store building.

The plant will employ women, and wages will be paid in accordance to the wage scale established by the government. There will be a number of available positions for women over 16 years of age. Applicants will be received Saturday, June 26th, between the hours of 1 and 4 P. M. at the location mentioned above. Hallie Ruble will operate the new concern, which is to be placed in operation soon after the first of July.

We, the townspeople of Walton and vicinity, should be enthused and pleased at this announcement, inasmuch as it is the first step in obtaining a portion of the Manufacturing business, which authorities prophesy is going to decentralize in the post war period.

Mrs. Abbie Wayman Bird

Mrs. Abbie Wayman Bird, wife of Ira W. Bird passed away early Tuesday morning, June 15, 1943 at her home in Crittenden, Kentucky, she was 77. Mrs. Bird had been ill for two and one-half years.

She is survived by her husband, Ira W. Bird, one sister, Mrs. Alice Von Richthofen of Independence, Ky. and one brother Charles R. Wayman of Dayton, Ohio and many other relatives and a host of friends. She had lived all of her married life in Crittenden, Ky., and was a member of the Crittenden Baptist Church more than fifty years.

Funeral services were held at the home on Thursday, June 17th at 2 P. M. with interment in Independence Cemetery under the direction of Harry J. Eckler.

Wayman's Family Reunion Will Be Held Sunday, June 27th at Pleasure Isle.

The Wayman's Family Reunion will be held Sunday, June 27th at Pleasure Isle on 3 L Highway, State Route No. 17.

The Wayman family of 300 have decided to get together for the second time in the history of the Wayman's since he first settlemen West of the Allegheny mountains in 1775. Aaren Wayman and his wife (Rosalin) came on horseback to this part of the country and settled at Fowler's Creek and Banklick Creek at Independence Hill. He bought 1000 acres of land for 30 cents per acre.

His descendants since that time have settled in various parts of the United States. We are using every means possible to notify every relative to the Wayman's so that they may be present at this Reunion at Pleasure Isle. Your name does not have to be Wayman to attend. We want all the relatives to come. Prizes will be given to the oldest, youngest and largest family present.

Take time to have a good time, sometimes we are gone a long time. Bring Your Family and Relatives, your fishing tackle, your bathing suit and a full basket.

U. S. Crop Volunteer Corps Organized

U. S. Crops Volunteer Workers community groups were organized the past week in Burlington, Walton and Florence according to H. R. Porkner, County Agent. More communities are expected to organize in the near future. Professional men in all lines of work were enrolled and have offered their assistance to local farmers in doing emergency work in producing food and feed crops.

These volunteer workers will be available only in the afternoons and in most cases a few hours in the late afternoon. Members of the Burlington group performed their first duties last Saturday afternon in helping a local farmer put his hay crop in the barn.

Volunteer workers will receive 50 cents per hour or a daily rate of $4 per day, in most instances. This is at the regular farm wage but it was considered in line with the emergency jobs. It will also relieve competition with any other farm labor that might be available.

Farmers who are in an emergency where their crop will be lost or greatly damaged should not hesitate to call the county agent's office, who in turn will contact the community committees in charge of the farm volunteer groups. The groups will serve in worthy cases whether the farmer is able to pay or not. All volunteers to date have expressed little or no interest in the pay, but want to be of maximum war service.

The volunteers will work in groups of four to six or more and will prove valuable assistance to many farmers in need.

Canning Program Important

"Save all food, fill all jars" may well be the canning slogan this year, according to Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent. At canning demonstrations listed below, Mrs. Moore will show types of equipment to be used, and methods of canning fruits and vegetables. In the face of the labor shortage as well as the food shortage it will be found expensive to risk out-of-date or guess-work canning practices this year. The meetings are being held early to allow persons to attend them before the canning season has advanced to its heaviest stage.

Homemakers and 4-H Club leaders are assisting Mrs. Moore in arranging and presenting these demonstrations. Everyone is urged to attend and bring a neighbor. Why ask the woman across the fence when you can learn "first hand" from a reliable source? Your Extension Service will give you the best information available.

Demonstration schedule is as follows:

June 24—Burlington school luncheon, 1:30 E. W. T.; June 29—New Haven school, 1:00 E. W. T.; July 1—Taylorsport school, 1:00 E. W. T.; July 2—Limaburg, Mrs. Fred Bennett's home, 1:30 E. W. T.; July 7—Verona school luncheroom, 3:00 E. W. T.; July 7—Walton Colored Church, 7:00 E. W. T.; July 8—Idlewild Creamy, 2:30 E. W. T. Demonstrations will also be given at Hebron, Grant and Hamilton.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Mediterranean Victories Prepare Way For New Allied Campaign Against Axis; Essential Production to Be Increased By Simplification of Consumer Items

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.) Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Under the watchful eyes of U. S. guards, Axis prisoners march in internment camp in Camp Atterbury, Ind. Since fighting in North Africa, many of these camps have sprung up throughout the country, the average concentration holding 2,000 prisoners and 500 American troops. Prisoners of war are treated under rules of an international convention.

MEDITERRANEAN: Eyes Turn to Sicily

With Allied shipping reported massed in the Sicilian straits, all Italy awaited invasion.

Preparatory to the expected blow at the "underbelly of Europe," Allied airmen ranged over the Italian islands of Sardinia and Sicily, the Axis' remaining bastions in the Mediterranean following the fall of Pantelleria, Lampedusa, Lampione and Linosa.

Airfields at Catania and Gerbini in Sicily were attacked. At Catania, enemy fighters rose in force to challenge the Allied assault.

Although Allied headquarters remained silent on their military movements in the Mediterranean, the Nazis reported that their airmen were engaging in running fights with large convoys off North Africa. The Axis also stated that the Allies had massed invasion barges at Bizerte.

Meanwhile, the Allies kept the Axis guessing about their next move. Strong aerial formations attacked Axis shipping in the Aegean sea, where the Nazis have fortified the islands leading to the Grecian mainland.

SIMPLIFY GOODS: From Cradle to Grave

In an effort to increase production of necessary essentials, the government has ordered the simplification of more than 1,000 manufactured items. Elimination of frills and variety of sizes is expected to result in enough conservation of material to add to production.

The simplification order will affect Americans from the cradle-to-the-grave. Metal will be restricted in baby's cribs, and the length, width and depth of coffins will be limited. Cast iron kitchen utensils will be confined to 12 items, and 40 styles of enamelware have been eliminated.

Wood furniture will be reduced to 24 basic patterns. Whereas 1,150 types of tools formerly were made, only 357 now will be permitted. Production of electric bulbs will be cut from 9,500 types to 1,700. Feminine apparel will be simplified along with children's sportswear and rayon dresses.

AIR OFFENSIVE: Cities in Flames

Bremen's big Atlas shipyards were rocked by a dozen bomb hits as American airmen continued their joint attacks with the RAF over German industrial centers. Results of the U. S. raid on the submarine base of Kiel were unobserved, as swarms of Nazi fighter planes arose to the defense.

While the Americans hammered the Atlas works, strong British units, bolstered by huge four-engined bombers, ripped Duesseldorf and Bochum in the Ruhr.

Blockbusters caused heavy damage in both cities, sweeping fires adding to the havoc. Mass evacuations were reported, and the German radio asked people in other districts to make room for the refugees.

Size of the raiding fleets can be gleaned from the Nazi claim of having shot down 46 planes, 29 of which were supposed to be the four-engined machines. German aerial activity meanwhile was limited to a short, sharp sally over a London suburb, where bombs were dropped.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS: World Cooperation

American participation in the establishment and maintenance of post-war peace was unanimously recommended by the house foreign affairs committee.

In a simple, 35-word resolution which it recommended to the house and senate for approval, the committee declared: ". . . Congress hereby express itself as favoring the creation of appropriate international machinery with power adequate to establish and to maintain a just and lasting peace, and as favoring participation by the United States therein."

Introduced by Representative J. W. Fulbright (Ark.), the resolution was passed after being stripped of the phrase calling for the organization of an international body to prevent future aggression, and to maintain law, order and lasting peace. Since this section touched on the highly controversial subject of an international police force, it was eliminated.

FOOD CZAR: Wanted by Congress

Shortly after a bi-partisan group of legislators conferred with President Roosevelt and suggested that he appoint a single czar to handle the food situation, the War Food administration prepared issuance of a report dealing with unfavorable crop and meat prospects.

Led by Senator Walter George, the five senators and four representatives urged that a single authority be delegated to co-ordinate production, distribution, preservation, rationing and pricing agricultural commodities.

It was reported the President suggested an appropriation from 1½ to 2 billion dollars for subsidies to be used in "rolling back" the prices of foods. Many legislators oppose the subsidies, contending the money used only will have to be repaid in taxes.

In commenting on crop prospects, the War Food administration declared floods in the Midwest and dry weather over the great plains have caused considerable damage. Meat slaughter and dairy production have failed to approach expectations.

DRAFT: Fathers Due for Call

"Fathers will be placed in uniform at least by the last quarter of this year."

With this statement the War Manpower commission, headed by Paul V. McNutt, announced the Selective Service board's new draft policy in informing employers to prepare for replacement of married men with children in industry after October 1.

In addressing 5,500 employers who have filed replacement lists with state draft directors, the WMC said that after July 1 the employers also should plan to release the childless married men within six months.

Although the WMC's remarks were directed to the 5,500 employers, it indicated that its new policy would be broadly applied throughout all industry. Speaking before a house appropriations subcommittee, Draft Director Hershey said 10,900,000 men will be in uniform by December 31. During the first six months of 1944, 115,000 men will be inducted monthly, Hershey declared.

Washington, D. C.

CHURCHILL'S TIP

One significant phase of Winston Churchill's conversations here has just leaked out. He volunteered some valuable advice on the make-up of the U. S. delegation to the peace conference.

Talking to a closed-door session of the senate and house foreign relations committees, he was reminded that if Woodrow Wilson had given more thought to the makeup of the U. S. delegation, his efforts to enroll the United States in a League of Nations might not have been such a failure.

Churchill at first tactfully sidestepped comment, explaining he didn't want to stick his nose in American affairs. However, he finally observed with a grin that he knew a little about politics himself and possibly could offer one suggestion.

"What is it?" chorused several of the politicos.

"Appoint a delegation that is strictly bi-partisan," Churchill replied, "half Democrat and half Republican."

If the President named such a commission of outstanding leaders of both parties, the prime minister added, his chances of winning congressional approval of a treaty among the Allied powers would be greatly enhanced.

LEARNING JAP LANGUAGE

Officer Candidate schools have a reputation for being tough, but the Naval Intelligence Japanese Language school at Boulder, Colo., sets a new record. Hand-picked candidates from colleges and graduate schools pore over Japanese "Kanji" (word pictures) 16 hours a day, 6 days a week, for 14 months.

These 800 students are given intimate high pressure instruction in classes of only five men each. The faculty consists of 150 Japanese-Americans, former professional and business men, recruited from the East and West coast Japanese colonies.

The course is intensive, and the students are given no job except the principal one of learning the difficult Japanese language. Unlike other officer candidates, they have no guard duty, KP, or night hivouacs. Their job is to learn Japanese, learn it quickly, and learn it well.

SENATOR GLASS

Much-loved 85-year-old Senator Carter Glass of Virginia is expected by friends to drop out of the senate before many months. He has served as Woodrow Wilson's secretary of the treasury, 23 faithful years in the senate and 17 years in the house.

Virginia politicos close to Governor Darden are passing out the tip that when Glass retires, Darden will appoint as the senator's successor, not 55-year-old Congressman Cliff Woodrum, the most outstanding congressman from Virginia, but 73-year-old Congressman Tom Burch.

WHO OWNS THE FARMS?

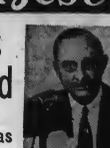
Most people have the idea that Washington postwar planners are thinking only of the people in foreign countries. But that isn't the case. They are also thinking of how the land of America can be returned to the people of America.

Real fact is that much of the big land holdings in the U. S. A. are in the hands of insurance companies and absentee landlords, as strikingly brought out by latest AAA conservation and parity payments.

In four of the country's biggest farming states, largest payments were made not to individual farmers but to life insurance companies. Here are the actual payments, each one being the highest payment in that state:

Ohio—Union Central Life Insurance company, Cincinnati, $49,153; Wisconsin — Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance company, Milwaukee, $47,517; Iowa — Equitable Life Insurance company, Des Moines, $33,418; Missouri—General American Life Insurance company, St. Louis, $52,170.

In Mississippi, the largest payment went to an absentee landlord, the British owners of Delta and Pine Land company, Scott, Miss. The property is managed by a former AAA official, Oscar Johnston. The payment was $50,141.



Highest payment in Illinois went to the First Trust Joint Stock Land bank, Chicago, $29,152. Highest in Nebraska went to the Federal Land Bank of Omaha, $77,605, while the same thing was true in Minnesota, where the largest payment, $75,761, went to the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul. The land banks hold a lot of property as a result of mortgage foreclosures in the lean years.

Largest payments in the four largest agricultural states of the northeast also went to insurance companies.

New York—Metropolitan Life Insurance company, New York city, $101,863. Incidentally, this was the largest payment made in the entire country. Connecticut — Connecticut General Life Insurance company, Hartford, $48,437. Pennsylvania—Providence Mutual Life Insurance company, Philadelphia, $13,022. New Jersey—Mutual Benefit Life Insurance company of Newark, received payment of $82,126.

History Will Write Details Of Lewis-Roosevelt Feud

Story Begins During 'Roaring Thirties' as The Forgotten Man Is Remembered By New Deal and CIO.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

Today there came to my desk a mimeographed sheet from the Office of War Information. It was headed "The Nazi Slave Labor Society."

As I read that title, my mind shot back to a very few days before this writing, one of the days when your capital was tense over the coal strike from one end of Constitution avenue to the other, and on both sides of the Potomac. I say "Constitution" avenue instead of "Pennsylvania" (which you and I have come to feel is the main street of Washington) because this coal strike struck deep into a lot of offices and hureaus beside the White House at one end of this historic thoroughfare and the Capitol at the other.

Naturally, Harold Ickes, in his offices looking down the mall from that strange modernistic pile that is the new Interior building, was concerned. He was, at that moment, responsible head of the soft coal mining industry and the industry wasn't functioning.

Naturally the members of the War Labor board were concerned. The board's existence was threatened.

Two Worries

Over across the Potomac in that marvelous architectural achievement, the Pentagon building, where the army is housed, officers paced the floor of their pentagonal offices. They had two worries. One: Will there be a coal shortage that will hold up production of important war supplies? Two: Will we have to go out and push people around with bayonets?

I haven't mentioned what was going on at the Capitol or in the White House. Plenty. Every enemy of the administration, every friend of the administration who was angry at Lewis, everyone who was for 100 per cent prosecution of the war—and they weren't necessarily different people, but people with different ideas—was yelling for Lewis' eyebrows and some of them were threatening the President if he didn't bring them in (on a silver charger) for breakfast.

Inside the White House, there were meetings which, because of the presence and absence of certain persons, I would like to report in greater detail but I can't—that will have to be left to history.

As I write these lines, I cannot predict the aftermath of the action which began late one afternoon on June 3 when, contrary to reports circulated earlier in the day, a statement was issued from the White House ordering the men back to the mines by June 7. But between these lines of that statement was the story of "Franklinstein" and the creature which he created, as dramatic, if not as tragic, as the horror tale by the gentle Mrs. Shelly, written early in the 19th century.

Self-Destroyer

A copy of that book ("Frankenstein") is on my table as I write. On the last page are the lines spoken by this strange being which the hero had created, hoping to raise the standard of humanity but which, alas, had found itself heir to the human weaknesses and turned against his creator. The "being," just before it destroys itself, speaks to its creator:

". . . thou didst seek my extinction that I might not cause greater wretchedness; and if yet, in some mode unknown to me, thou hast not ceased to think and feel, thou wouldst not desire against me a vengeance greater than that which I feel. Blasted as thou wert, my agony was still superior to thine . . ."

(You really ought to read the book—it's far superior to the movie version.)

But why do I bandy with this ancient tale? Because I do believe that all of us build, materially or physically, creatures which come back to haunt us.

Look at the record of John Lewis and Franklin Roosevelt.

John, born to the pits, a man who won to literacy, yes, to scholarship the hard way.

Franklin, born to the purple.

Both endowed with that indomitable something that lifted them, in spite of their respective handicaps, to leadership. Egocentric enough to elbow their way up to the counter; altruistic enough to have something to contribute to the general welfare when they got there. Reader, be fair even if you have your honest prejudices—both these men are gifted.

A Quick Look

Pick up the story in the roaring thirties—the New Deal is beginning to strut its stuff. The "forgotten man" has been remembered and he's grateful to Roosevelt.

The forgotten laborer is being remembered; he's grateful to Lewis. I mean the man who couldn't because of the hy-laws of the AFL, get into a labor union any more than he could get into the Union League club. Lewis stepped out of the AFL with his miners. The CIO was formed in 1935.

It looked as if John of the eyebrows and Franklin of the amber cigarette holder had something in common. They did. It began by being an ideal—a better deal for the man who hadn't had such a good deal before. Later, the issues became more complicated but we won't go into that now.

Anyhow, the Wagner act was passed in 1935. (Labor's Magna Charter, they called it.) That gave the poor, beretofore outsider, the workman who couldn't qualify, to join the snooty AFL, a chance to be somebody. If there were more of his group than there were of the AFL's in a plant, shop or factory, his outfit was recognized as the collective bargaining unit.

That was a real step forward in economic democracy.

The CIO thrived. It had the blessing of the administration. It gave its votes in return. It also gave the largest campaign contribution in return. Some of the starry-eyed young men in the New Deal (they have departed, most of them, for Puerto Rico and elsewhere on the fringes) dreamed dreams. They told their dreams to Lewis.

"Why not a real labor party, Jawn," they smiled encouragingly, "with you as the leader? We'll get rid of the democrats without imagination. You'll be vice president next time . . ."

The Siren's Song

But then Mr. Lewis made a great mistake. He went to Paris. Other men have erred in that once-fair city before this. (I visited it myself.) But John met another siren . . . he witnessed the sit-down strike.

Now, frankly, this is hearsay but I am told that it was Lewis brought that illegitimate Gallic child of the proletariat, conceived in a strange moment of aberration, back to America. It did not thrive. It needed a more rarified atmosphere than that which blows across the prairies and once flapped the cover of the covered wagon.

Mr. Lewis went to the White House, jerked the previously welcoming latchstring, and went in. But old man Vox Populi got there before him. Up to then, V. P. had been pretty satisfied with things as they were under the New Deal.

But things had changed.

In a chilly voice V. P. said: "No, Franklin, no John. No dice."

Franklin listened. John got mad.

That was the end of a beautiful friendship and the rest is history. Lewis turned against the man who had made his success possible and there is, as we know, no feud like the feud of former friends.

The soldier on the battlefield, utterly unable to comprehend why men strike while he is risking his life for a fraction of the pay the strikers demand, cursed and threatened; the miner, with many just grievances, stood confused, looking for his oracle to speak, but cringing under the sneers at his lack of patriotism. Small-minded hureaucrats, more interested in saving their faces than saving the country, sputtered and strutted. Lewis and Roosevelt, the two men who, working together, might move mountains (of coal and coalition) were forced to square off against each other, the public backed the government and, as usual, decided the issue.

Oh yes! That "Nazi Slave Labor Society"—it can't happen here!

JOHN'S COUNSEL TO CHRISTIANS

LESSON TEXT—II John 4-11; III John 5-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Beloved, I pray that in all things thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.—III John 2.

Christians need guidance, especially in their home and church relationships. The apostle John, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, wrote the two personal letters known to us as II and III John. They abound in sound spiritual, practical advice. Note that these two words belong together, for what is truly spiritual cannot help but be tremendously practical and perfect for the direction of thought and life.

In these letters five admirable lessons are taught. Let us give heed to them. They are appropriate to our day.

I. Set an Example Before Your Children (II John 4-6).

We may not like to admit it, but our children are largely what we make them by their training—or lack of it—in the home. Parents have the grave and at the same time precious responsibility of being what they want their children to be. We set the mold of their thinking and acting, not only about material things, but mentally and spiritually, which is far more important.

Above all we must teach them by precept and example to love God supremely, and to walk after His commandments. Father, mother, have you done your duty? Are your children "walking in truth" (v. 4)?

II. Be on Guard Against False Teachers (II John 7-11).

We are not to countenance false teaching even by entertaining such teachers, or having close fellowship with them. To create the impression before the world and the Church that they are "not so bad," by appearing as their friends, is to partake of their evil works (v. 11). This is a serious matter, and one which is a problem in the Church today.

Such teachers may easily be recognized. They are aptly described by Dr. Douglass: "In all ages the Church has been plagued by those who want to substitute something for pure Christian faith, or to embroider it with bright ideas of their own conceiving. Such people may try to strip religion of its supernatural aspect and reduce it to a merely rationalistic system. They may seek to slyly loosen the moral standards of the Church because their own lives are deficient when measured by such standards. They may try to minimize the teaching of the cross because it stands for sacrifice." Watch against them, and stand against their destructive teaching.

III. Be Diligent in Putting Forward True Teachers (III John 5-8).

The door which should be closed against false teachers should be opened wide to those who are faithful teachers of the truth.

This refers primarily to the hospitality of the home, and reminds us of a grace which has been all but forgotten in these days of small apartments.

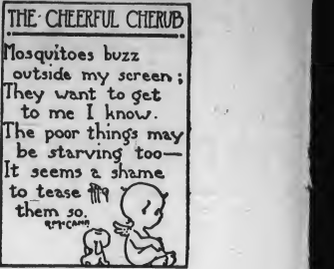
Whether we are able to open our homes to God's servants or not, we can show a Christian spirit of genuine hospitality in helping to bring them forward (v. 6) in their work. This may be done by gifts of money, by kindness shown in time of need, by a real interest in their work, by recommending them to others who wish to bear the truth.

Do everything possible, then, to hinder the false teacher, and be just as diligent to put forward the ministry of the true man of God.

IV. Do Not Trust Proud, Self-Seeking Leadership (III John 9-11).

A man may be orthodox, and intensely loyal to the denomination, and at the same time be a wicked man whose example is to be shunned. No word is said against the teaching of Diotrephes. He was not condemned for being careless about the affairs of the church, or unfaithful in his attendance and devotion to its interest as he saw them.

The sin of Diotrephes was pride, a desire to be the boss of the church, "No. 1 man" in its affairs. Lacking the true spirituality which always results in humility, he opposed the apostle. Not only did he refuse to receive him, but used pressure on others who were willing to be hospitable.



V. Emulate the Life of the Man of Good Report (III John 12).

A good man! No words of praise could possibly surpass such a testimony. The world is full of brilliant, skilled, wealthy and prominent people, but there is an appalling dearth of good men and women.

How refreshing to meet, and how delightful to know, such a man—such a woman. Like Demetrius, they have not only the witness of the Church, and of the truth, but also of "all men." But last week we said the world hates real Christians. It does, but it also respects them, and is forced to bear witness to their reality and goodness.

Professed fellowship with God in Christ which does not result in goodness of life may well be scrutinized.

SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDENDS

The Interests of Capital and Labor are merged in Free Enterprise

It takes huge sums of money to finance America's railroads and other great industrial enterprises . . . money from the capital and savings of millions . . . from profits of business . . .

It takes large numbers of skilled and unskilled employees to operate the industries thus created.

But more important still—the financing and operation of industrial enterprises require ambitious men, spurred to great accomplishment by high reward for superior effort and merit. That indeed nurtures the American Spirit—the Spirit of Free Enterprise, which in one short year caused America's production to surpass the Dictators' ten-year start.

THE AMERICAN WAY
Under the Spirit of Free Enterprise . . .

the savings of free men combine with the voluntary labor of other free men to build great industrial enterprises . . .

capital hopes for a just return for the risk it takes . . .

labor bargains individually or collectively for the conditions of, and pay for, its employment . . .

the laborer of today may be the manager or owner of tomorrow . . .

efficient methods and machinery constantly increase production and variety of output at lower costs, thus more nearly satisfying the ever-growing wants of men . . .

THE HITLER WAY
Under the Spirit of Tyranny . . .

from the daily earnings or savings of people whatever is needed is taken by forced taxes or confiscation to promote government, or enterprise owned or directed by government, and to compel labor to work under the soldiers' lash entirely without freedom of choice or agreement . . .

protest by the people to government for injustices is not permitted. Secret police exercise the power of punishment or death without question.

THE AMERICAN SPIRIT WILL KEEP US FREE

The tremendous development of the United States is a direct outgrowth of freedom and the American Spirit, encouraged and promoted by Free Enterprise, privately owned and directed. It is the guiding star for the future.

PRESIDENT

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD

The L & N can prosper only as its territory prospers. Consequently, business reasons actuate it to encourage Southern industrial development, which in recent years has surpassed all other sections of the Nation. Freight rates and service are directed to that end.

The Southern freight rate structure is greatly misunderstood, and hence receives unmerited criticism. This statement is not to argue with those who publicly criticize the rate structure, but to assure industry it will not be discriminated against—it will be supported. The major effort of railroads is now to win the war. Thereafter, "The Old Reliable" will resume its primary purpose of aiding in the inevitable development of the South.

KENTUCKY SOYBEAN GOAL IS INCREASED

An increase in the Kentucky soibean goal from 140,000 acres to 165,000 acres has been announced by M. D. Royse, Chairman of the Kentucky Agricultural Adjustment Agency and USDA War Board.

"Oil crops are very important to the war effort," Royse explained. "It is hoped that every farmer can see his way clear to increase his intended soybean acreage sufficiently to meet the new State goal."

Although farmers in Boone County has been hampered in spring planting by unfavorable weather conditions, every effort should be made to produce food and fiber to meet the farm's war crop goal.

"In many cases, farmers are altering crop plans in view of the existing weather conditions," stated Mark Cook, Chairman of the Boone County AAA and USDA War Board. Although conditions may exist where some drops will not be planted due to the late season, farmers can use the land for the planting of soybeans. This will not only assure the farmer of an income but will be of tremendous value in agriculture's all-out fight against the Axis."

British air-sea rescue experts have invented an air-borne lifeboat that can be dropped by parachute and with its own power can carry 11 men 100 miles.

Kenton County Farm News

Neighbors Cooperate, and Get the Job Done.

Kenton County farmers in many sections of the county are trading work and in this way help to solve the farm labor shortage.

An example of this is where two or more farmers work together in putting up their hay crops. Two or three men can save time and do a good job of harvesting the hay crop where it would be difficult or impossible to do it if they tried to work alone. With a little planning often one crop can be harvested ahead of the adjoining farm and in this way all the hay be saved in time. During this emergency it becomes necessary for cooperation to get the job done. Maybe it is a blessing in disguise because farmers are again laying aside their likes and dislikes and developing a spirit of cooperation which has been lacking in some cases. There is usually a solution to a problem if farmer neighbors will talk over the problem and cooperate in working out the solution.

Sheep Production

According to the Animal Husbandry Department of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, Lexington, phenothiazine and salt mixture gives promising results. During the past two years, the Zoology Division of the Bureau of Animal Husbandry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, and several state experiment stations have experiments with mixtures of phenothiazine and salt for the control of internal parasites in sheep. Recent releases of results indicate that this method of administering phenothiazine is of value in controlling most of the important round worms in sheep. The U. S. D. A. found that when sheep were allowed free access to a mixture of 1 part phenothiazine and 9 parts salt that the round worm eggs passed out with the feces, were rendered infertile and did not develop into infectious worms to reinfest the animals and that "the number of internal parasites, as judged by the number of eggs found in the feces and by the number of worms recovered at post-mortem examinations, were reduced markedly after 3 or 4 weeks of medications."

Bluestone-Nicotine Still Needed for Tapeworm Control.—Farmers who wish to try this method of control should first dose the entire flock, both ewes and lambs, with phenothiazine—25 grams or one ounce for the ewes and ¼ ounce or less for the lambs, depending on size—and then continue with phenothiazine and salt mixture placed in open containers constructed in such a way as to protect the mixture from the weather. Also, since most of our sheep are handled on infested pastures and since phenothiazine is ineffective against tape worms, it will probably be advisable to give two treatments of the Cunic mixture (combination bluestone and "Black Leak 40), one in June and the other at weaning time in July. Until further information is available, it is suggested that the dosing of sheep in late fall and again after lambing with phenothiazine be continued.

PUBLIC INFORMATION
Would Make Idleness Unpopular As Long As Farmers Need Workers.

With farmers needing help, idleness should be unpopular and unpatriotic, says Dean Thomas P. Cooper of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

"With the great need for food to supply our armed forces all over the world, such loafing as has existed in past years around court house squares, corner stores, filling stations and the like, should not exist this year," he declared.

Dean Cooper thinks farm labor problems will be solved locally, in that help will be found in towns and villages and on small farms, for the most part. In the State as a whole, he believes there are enough persons to do the farming, although a shortage of labor may occur in some localities.

"It is important that farmers have help so they can meet their production goals," he stressed. "Aroused public opinion will do much to direct and develop the labor needed in producing food. It should be unpopular as well as unpatriotic to be idle as long as farmers need help."

Farmers in need of help should make their wants known at the office of their county agent. Also, men, women and young people who can work on farms should make that fact known to the county agent.

Cooperating with the College of Agriculture in a program to secure farm labor are the United States Employment Service, the Farm Security Administration, Vocational Agriculture and the Office of Education, the War Manpower Commission, the Office of Civilian Defense and other agencies.

Virgil P. Sanders Appointed Publicity Director for J. Lyter Donaldson's Campaign.

Announcement has been made of the appointment of Virgil P. Sanders, editor and publisher of the Carrollton News-Democrat, as publicity director for the J. Lyter Donaldson gubernatorial campaign. Sanders will maintain offices in the Henry Watterson hotel headquarters of Donaldson in Louisville, and will direct all publicity and advertising for the campaign.

Concerning plans for his new job, Sanders said, "Kentuckians are entirely too busy doing their part in the war effort to read or listen to a lot of political poppycock and mud slinging. Mr. Donaldson's publicity will concern soley problems confronting the Commonwealth and the possible solutions therof, plus his outstanding qualifications for the position he seeks."

A native of Pike county, Sanders is a son of Dr. and Mrs. P. C. Sanders, of Danville. He formerly was connected with the Daily Messenger there. He bought the Carrollton weekly in December 1940, after several years in the hardawre business at Madisonville.

Prominently indentified with the Kentucky Press Association, Sanders is amember of the legislative committee and represents the Sixth district on the executive board. He is also a member of the board of publishers of the American Press Association.

Sanders attended Centre college, the United States Naval Academy and studied journalism at the University of Kentucky. He married Eunice Jane Denton, of Madisonville, and they have a son and daughter.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. March 11 Lieut. Bulkeley showed the squadron their secret orders. They were to carry General MacArthur's party and some additional personnel to the southern islands where they would be met by transport planes which would carry General MacArthur to his new headquarters. When Kelly arrived at the rendezvous the others were missing.

CHAPTER X

"I had an idea where they would be, and I explained. Bulkeley, I was sure, would take no chances with women and a child aboard. Of course he'd seen the Japanese signal fire the night before. Planes might be out spotting us for destroyers, and as soon as dawn broke Bulkeley undoubtedly had made for the nearest of those other Cuyos—picking one from his chart (we'd never been here before) which was surrounded by reefs and water so shallow that no destroyer could venture within gun range or even within sight. There he would wait all day, if not until dusk, at least until he thought the danger of spotting planes was past, before coming to join us here.

"So at 8:37 we dropped a hook in the cove and I sent two men ashore with semaphore flags to climb the island's single five-hundred-foot hill and stand continuous watch—for the other three boats of course, but particularly for Japs.

"At 5:30, when we figured any spotting planes would have had to head back for home, I was about to pull our lookouts from the hill and get under way when they wigwagged down that they saw a ship—apparently friendly, maybe an MTB. I picked it up with my binoculars and presently made out the 32 boat, which soon tied up alongside us.

"It was this boat, remember, which had been repaired after its explosion. The cook had been blown into Sisiman Cove. During the night its struts started coming loose, so they could use only one or two of their three engines, and they, like us, had lost touch with the other boats in the night. But instead of falling far behind the flagship, they had somehow managed, in the darkness, to get out in front of it.

"In the first gray light of dawn, their stern lookout reported a strange ship—gaining on them. Looked like a Jap destroyer. Now an MTB in good condition can outrun any warship afloat. But the 32 boat was hobbling on two engines, so although he was running full throttle, its commander wasn't surprised that the strange craft kept gaining. In order to lighten his boat and pull away, he dumped six hundred gallons of gasoline in drums over the side, but still the enemy was closing on him. There seemed nothing to do now but fight before the destroyer opened with its 3-inch guns. They readied two torpedoes and turned dauntlessly for the attack, to discover just in time that the strange pursuing craft was the 41 boat—their own flagship with General MacArthur aboard.

"So here they were—loaded down to the water line with seasick and puzzled generals. Just at this point there was a rising roar from seaward, and the 41 boat came around the point, Bulkeley and General MacArthur's party."

"We'd lost sight of you a few hours before dawn," said Bulkeley, "when you stopped to clean your strainers. I went on ahead because I wanted to get as deep as possible into the Cuyo Islands before sunrise.

"As the sky pinkened I headed for the nearest and best—it was one of the prearranged crosses on the map. It wasn't much of an island—only a quarter of a mile wide—but it had plenty of shallow water to keep off Jap destroyers.

"Lying at anchor, some of the crew picked off a little sleep as we rolled gently in the sunshine. Presently the General came on deck; he was a fine figure in his camel's-hair coat and gold hat, frowning a little as he squinted in the sunshine at the water and white sand. Then Mrs. MacArthur and the little boy and his Chinese amah came up to sit in wicker chairs in the sunshine. It was too bad little Arthur couldn't have played on the beach, but I told the General no one should go ashore. Because if dive bombers came over and spotted us, we would have to get the hell out of that cove quick, leaving even the lookout behind, and cut into open water where we could dodge and twist.

"I figured the morning would be the dangerous time for bombers, if they knew we had slipped out, so by two o'clock I felt it was safe to get under way, and we threaded down through the little shoaly channels between the islands, which would defy a destroyer or cruiser to follow, approaching the last one, which was our general rendezvous. In the distance I could see the other two boats also heading for it, and when we arrived, Kelly in the 34 boat was already there and waiting.

"Then there was the problem of what to do about the 32 boat, which had dumped most of its gas at dawn, and couldn't proceed much farther at high speed.

"This was a rendezvous not only for our four MTB's, but also for General MacArthur's second means of escape—a submarine. It had all been carefully worked out, and the submarine would bob up in this cove tomorrow. Had we been attacked or broken down, the General could have left us here, and continued his trip on down to Australia by submarine.

"General MacArthur, Admiral Rockwell and Lieutenant Bulkeley talked about the night's plans—the advisability of continuing with us tonight or going by submarine," went on Lieutenant Kelly. "The Admiral was for staying with us, but the General was undecided. The afternoon trip had been rough, and Bulkeley had warned the night would be rougher. Yet as we lay there in the cove, the sea seemed calm enough, and the sky gave no hint of bad weather. So on the assurance of the Admiral that it would be good weather, the General decided they'd continue with us.

"Then, as Bulkeley had said, there was the problem of what to do with the 32 boat, which had dumped much of her gasoline. She did not have enough left to make the fast run with us to the island of Mindanao, where the General's party would get the plane for Australia. So Bulkeley gave her different orders. Her generals were to be transferred to my boat. She was to wait here in the rendezvous until tomorrow when the submarine arrived. She was to tell the submarine that everything had gone well, the General had gone on to Mindanao and would go to Australia by plane, as planned. Having delivered this message, the 32 boat was to go to Iloilo on the island of Panay, only one hundred and twenty miles away. There she could get repairs and enough gas to bring her on down to Cagayan to join the rest of us in the other three boats, and we would finish the war together in the southern islands.

"They wigwagged down that they saw a ship—apparently friendly."

"What went wrong with this plan, we don't know to this day. The boat's commander, Lieutenant Schumacher, must have decided that it wasn't in condition to follow these orders. Anyway, when the submarine arrived, he had it shell the 32 boat, so it would not fall into Japanese hands, and boarded the submarine, which dropped his crew off at Corregidor, and took him safely to Australia.

"We found out much later that he had gotten to Australia. For some time their disappearance was a mystery, and Bulkeley here spent several days flying out over all those islands trying to find some trace of the 32 boat. Some day, of course, there will be a full report on exactly what did happen which will explain everything.

"All we know is that we last saw them back there in the cove as we left the harbor—a hard right turn and then out to sea, at about 6:30. We were leading, so that the flagship, just behind us, could search out the smoothest part of our wake, so that MacArthur's party could ride comfortably. We'd been going about fifteen minutes when the port lookout called 'Sail-ho!' and there she was—three points on our port bow, distance about five miles. 'Looks like an enemy cruiser!' said the lookout. I grabbed my binoculars, and so it was! Hull down, but masts and superstructure plain. On the course we were steering we would cross her bow. I gave the 34 full right rudder and full speed ahead—it was much faster than eighteen knots, because the carbon had burned out of our motors. I knew that type of Jap cruiser could make thirty-five knots with all steam up. But unless they were expecting something, they could only make twenty-seven. So we had a good chance of keeping away from them—it might be dark before they could close in.

"Meanwhile I was hoping they hadn't seen us and praying that the sun would hurry up and set, but it just pooped along—seemed to hang there above the horizon for weeks, and finally bobbed under at seven o'clock.

"If you've never been in the tropics, you don't realize how fast it gets dark—almost no twilight at all."

"I think it was the whitecaps that saved us," said Bulkeley. "The Japs didn't notice our wake, even though we were foaming away at full throttle.

"During the excitement, the General was lying down in the cabin with his eyes closed, but Mrs. MacArthur, who was with him, heard everything that went on and she didn't turn a hair. She took it like a lady—went right on rubbing the General's hands to keep up his circulation, though she was seasick herself.

"I never went below, and all my men stayed at battle stations, so the people in the cabin took care of themselves—there was no one to wait on them. The General saw that I was supplied with cigars. They were pretty well provisioned. They'd brought from Corregidor, among other things, a few cases of Coca-Cola—the first I'd tasted in many weeks—and some of the tenderest ham I ever ate.

"It got dark fast after sunset, a wind sprang up, and ahead we could see lightning flashes. But these didn't help us find the narrow passage into the Mindanao Sea. We were going in the dark entirely by dead reckoning. At midnight we figured we'd be off the strait—so we turned into the pitch-blackness, holding our breath, but still we didn't hit anything. I had no charts, I'd never been there before, I could see absolutely nothing, but since we didn't crash into a beach, we kept on going, and at last I knew we were through and safely into Mindanao Sea — our dead-reckoning navigation had been right."

"And there we really caught hell," said Kelly. "Big foaming waves fifteen or twenty feet high thundering over the cockpit, drenching everybody topside. Also, because of the speed, water and wind, it got damned cold. Our binoculars were full of water and our eyes so continuously drenched with stinging salt that we couldn't see, in strange waters with islands all around us. We could see the outlines of the big ones—Negros and Mindanao—very dimly against the horizon through the storm. But there were dozens of small ones and probably hundreds of reefs.

"The sea was on our port bow, tending to drive us south. We expected to make a landfall forty miles dead ahead—a small island where we would turn—and let me tell you this was an unpleasant situation for a navigator. The helmsman's eyes and ours were full of salt, you had to keep one hand in front of your eyes to avoid the slapping force of the water, and yet you needed both to hold on. The Admiral was pretty wrought up. 'I've sailed every type of ship in the navy except one of these MTB's,' he shouted at me above the wind, 'and this is the worst bridge I've ever been on. I wouldn't do duty on one of these for anything in the world—you can have them.'

"It was a real problem to keep astern lookout for the 41 boat so we wouldn't lose it. Three good waves in a row and we'd be out of sight, and in that weather we could pass within seventy-five yards and never see each other. The 41 was now keeping about two hundred yards astern, hunting for the smoothest part of our wake, to keep the General's party comfortable. The General had said that if his boat slowed, we who were ahead should also slow, letting them set the pace. I know seasickness can be very unpleasant, but I wanted to get them safe in port by dawn, in case there were Jap planes about, so I kept pulling them on. It got rougher and rougher, and the Admiral kept remembering it had been he who had assured MacArthur that Bulkeley was wrong about the weather—it would be calm.

"The General's going to give me hell for this in the morning, he said, uneasily. 'Damned if I thought Bulkeley knew what he was talking about—but he surely did.'

"The Admiral stayed with me up on the bridge the whole trip, in spite of the weather. Every half-hour I would send a member of the crew over the boat for inspection, to see how its hull was standing the strain, for we were taking an awful licking.

"During one of these I noticed a figure by the machine-gun turret, sitting with his feet propped up on a torpedo tube. His stomach was long ago empty, but he was leaning forward, retching between his knees. From this I guessed it might be one of our passengers, and sent a quartermaster to ask him if he wouldn't care to go below. The quartermaster returned and saluted: 'The General says he doesn't want to move, sir—he knows what's best for him.'

SHOCK TREATMENT

Some mental patients receive home care, as the family do not want it known that such a thing as "insanity" is in the family. Fortunately, in most cases the family physician is able to persuade the family that mental illness is the same as any illness of the body and can be due to the same causes — infection, anxiety, shock, injury and others. Further, at the mental hospital today treatment to remove any cause of the symptoms is given; dentists, throat specialists, women's specialists are on the staff or make regular visits.

Dr. Barton

One of the most effective methods of treating certain types of mental illness is by producing shock in the patient by insulin, metrazol and, more recently, by electricity. Because of accidents that occasionally occur during shock this form of treatment has heretofore been given in mental hospitals and sometimes in the ordinary municipal hospitals.

What should mean much to a patient and family is a recent report by Dr. A. Myerson, Boston, in the New England Journal of Medicine. Dr. Myerson reports the results obtained by the electric-shock method in the treatment of 123 patients, 74 by the outpatient method. The patients reported at a place fitted out in hospital fashion with nurses and a physician in attendance. They were given the shock treatment and usually went home within one or two hours. In cases where the patient was too upset after the treatment he received further shock treatment at a mental hospital.

Compared to the risk of other methods of treatment of the same kind of mental ailments, the electric-shock treatment is much safer as to mental or physical injury.

The big point about being able to go to other than a mental or municipal hospital, receive the shock treatment, return home and continue the treatment for the weeks necessary, is that the family and patient have no feeling of shame or humiliation. To get this latest form of treatment so easily is certainly a real change from former days.

Nursing Along 'Heart Condition' by Resting

A few years ago a physician visiting a southern city made the acquaintance of another visitor who appeared to be "resting" all the time. He informed the physician that he had undergone a serious operation three months previously and as he has a "heart condition" he wished to consult a local heart specialist and asked the physician if he knew of one he could recommend. The physician, being a stranger, was unable to refer him to a heart specialist but asked him the nature of his heart condition.

"I have a heart murmur and after having this operation I was told to be careful of my heart."

"But a heart murmur is not serious nor was your operation of a serious nature." Operation for rupture or hernia is just changing the structure of the tissues in this region; there is no pus, no inflammation, and little or no shock. "This should not have taken much out of you."

A short examination by the physician revealed no enlargement of the heart, the murmur likely present when patient was born, no history of rheumatism. The patient walked slowly up and down stairs; the increase in the heart rate was about 10 beats and the heart was back to its normal rate within one minute. He walked slowly up and down stairs twice. The heart rate increased 16 beats and returned to normal within one and a half minutes. He was told that his heart was strong and exercise, not so much rest, was needed.

About 10 minutes later, he took his own pulse, walked up and down stairs twice, took his pulse again, waited the minute and a half and found the figures for the heart rate exactly the same as those found by the physician. He was therefore advised to take his daily rests but to take two walks daily, lengthening the walk one block every two days.

The point here is that while a heart murmur was present and he had undergone an operation three months before, his heart already had had all the rest needed and was ready for work or exercise.

Penitents Still Wearing 'Tickle Shirts' in Britain

One of Britain's oldest and strangest industries, hair shirt-making, is surviving the war. In remote convents, nuns are still engaged in making the shirts for people who wish to do their penance with realism. Monks and very pious people wear the shirts, which are uncomfortable and painful.

The full-size shirts worn in olden days have nearly disappeared, and today a scapula, or a belt in which is woven horse-hair, and in some cases human hair, is worn instead.

This form of penance dates back to the saints, but only in rare instances today do laymen adopt it. The shirts are worn only a few hours a week, and not long enough to harm the skin.

"It is appointed unto men once to die, but after that the judgement." Death is of divine appointment and life here is but a preparation of eternal life, and where you spend eternity is determined by the life you live, "little self self denials, little honesties, little passing words of sympathy, little nameless acts of kindness, little silent victories over temptations—these are the silent threads of gold, which when woven together gleam out so brightly in the patterns of life that God approves."

Dedication of the Honor Roll for the local soldiers boys serving our country's cause, sponsored by the Baptist Brotherhood of the Hickory Grove church Sunday afternoon, was largerly attended. A most interesting program was rendered, and to each of the mothers of the service men, was presented a lovely fragrant Carnation.

Kenneth E. Johnson Enters Race For Representative

Kenneth E. Johnson of Walton makes his formal bow to the voters of Boone and Gallatin County in this issue of the Advertiser, for the office of Representative.

He makes the following statement:

To the voters of Boone and Gallatin Counties, which now comprise a new Representative District, I personally deem it an honor and a privilege to be a candidate for the office of State Representative, in the first Primary Election to determine a candidate for this office.

Thru influence of friends in my home county of Boone and friends in Gallatin to whom I am well known I now make my formal announcement for the office of State Representative to the voters in this district which now includes these two neighboring counties.

For the past two years, I have been periodically away from home working on War Defense Plants. I cannot be too informative as to exact locations, but will say that in that time plants where I have worked on construction, are now pouring out tons of gun powder, carloads of loaded bags of this powder, turning out thirty and fifty caliber bullets by the thousands, and completed aeroplane motors are rolling off assembly lines and are being shipped, and ferried to all points of the globe.

Experiences of this type, and proud to have been a factor in completion of these plants, has been a source of great pride to me, and yet what little I have contributed seems to be but naught, when I think of the contributions that have been made in hundreds of homes in this district, as well as the nation at large. The boys and girls of our counties that have left their homes to take their places in battle areas on both land and sea. The donations to our blood banks for the preservation of the lives of our boys who are wounded. The money that has been loaned our Government by purchasing War Bonds to help keep our forces equipped and supported on the fighting fronts. The activities and work of our churches, various municipal, rural and community clubs that are of now centered on war time needs, and to reach this war eventual we hope soon) consummation.

Even with all these activities, we are still striving to maintain and are maintaining our home, community and public life that is the typical American way, our schools must be kept open for instructing our children as they have done in the past, our farms must be tilled to keep our food stocks ample to provide for wartime needs, and our government, National, State and County must be maintained if we present a solid front to our unworthy enemies.

With these thoughts in mind and a personal wish to further foster and contribute, I want my candidacy to be impressed on every voter on this district. I hope to be elected to this office I am seeking to further aid in main-

Grain Harvesting Machinery Listed In Boone Counuy

All grain and crop harvesting machinery that may be available for custom work in the county is being listed according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The lists are being secured through cooperation of neighborhood leaders and power machinery operators.

Five combines suitable for harvesting grain and seed crops are listed. They are owned by Parker Hollis, Burlington; R. H. Crisler Farm in North Bend Bottoms; Melvin Moore and Reuben Kirtley in East Bend; John Boh of Hebron; and R. H. Garrison of Burlington.

There are many grain binders and a few threshing machines over the county. A general list of these will be available in a few days.

The fact that a farmer may be listed as owing power machinery means in no way that he will be able to do custom work. However, it does offer an opportunity for neighbors who may need equipment to contact these parties and see if some kind of arrangements can be made.

The County Farm Labor Assistant hopes to be able to visit all harvesting machinery operators by the last of the week to get their terms and custom rates. Present conditions makes it important that all feed and food crops possible be saved.

4-H And Utopia Fair To Be Held Aug. 21st

The Eleventh Annual Boone County 4-H and Utopia Club Free Fair and county picnic will be held at the fair grounds, Saturday, August 21st, according to the 4-H and Utopia Club Council.

All cash premuins this year will be paid in War Bonds and Stamps. Food for Victory will be the center of all exhibits. The program will be in keeping with the recommendations. The home garden and home food supply will be a special feature.

The fair and county picnic has been planned after several months of careful consideration of problems involved. A large number of Utopia and older 4-H Club members and leaders who would be active in the program are now in military service or tied down to special war jobs. The food and drinks and novelty program that contributed much toward paying expenses are now most difficult to handle.

Despite all obstacles the 4-H and Utopia Club Council has decided it would be best for the war effort that the fair be held this year. The educational and recreational features all build for greater moral, understanding and desire for greater achievement.

This is our own county fair and picnic. Let us look forward to making the 1943 event the biggest and best on record.

Lucian Bradford Host To Utopia Club

Lucian Bradford of Union was host to approximately 38 Utopia Club members at his home near Union Thursday evening.

Russell Hunt, tobacco specialist from the college, addressed the members on the importance of tobacco as a cash crop in Kentucky. The income from the crop this year will represent the largest cash crop income for Kentucky farmers on record. Failure of farmers to treat their plant beds and to use disease resistant varieties has already caused considerable crop losses according to Mr. Hunt.

The heavy rains this spring has depleted the soil of nitrogen and other plant foods. Side dressing the growing crop with a complete fertilizer and the priming of the tobacco leaves as they ripen were also recommended.

Mrs. A. W. Fullerton of Florence addressed the club on new problems in canning and stressed means of preventing spoilage resulting from new equipment available for canning purposes. The use of the home made food dehydrator was explained.

The next meeting of the club will be held on July 22nd at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Moore of near Hebron. Plans will be made for holding the Eleventh Annual Boone County 4-H and Utopia Club Mree Fair on August 21st.

GEORGE NOE JR.

Promoted to Seaman First Class

Mrs. Sarah Noe of Walton has received word that her son George Noe Jr., has been promoted to seaman first class.

After leaving Great Lakes he went to sea and has not received a leave since that time.

Dry Beans Require Special Attention

Although dry beans usually are not a profitable crop in Kentucky, many plantings are being made for home use. Because special attention is required to produce a good crop, the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics offers the following suggestions:

Plant dry beans at least 100 days before frost. Use a corn planter with a special plate, dropping a bushel to the acre. The seed may be placed 3 inches apart in the row, or in hills of 3 seeds each about 18 inches apart, with the rows 3 feet apart.

The Navy, Great Northern and Pinto are good varieties.

To fertilize, use 300 to 500 pounds of 4-12-4 on ordinary land or the same amount of 2-12-6 on land that would make 40 to 50 bushels of corn to the acre. Sow the fertilizer in the row under the seed.

Spray or dust when the first eggs of the bean beetle appear, and again in 10 days. Apply to the undersides of the leaves. Usually two or three sprayings or dustings will do, if well done. If uncontrolled, the bean beetles may destroy the crop. The following are good dusts: one pound of magnesium arsenae and 6 pounds of lime; or one pound of calcium arsenate, one pound of fine dusting sulfur, and 4 pounds of hydrated lime. The spray is made of a pound and a half of magnesium arsenate to 50 gallons of water. Fifty to 100 gallons will spray an acre.

Combines are not usually satisfactory in harvesting beans, as they shatter easily. The best way is to pull the plants when the beans are mature and the pods practically dry. Then allow them to dry in the field a few days, and then thresh with a flail.

Weevils will destroy beans in storage soon after harvest if not controlled. Put the beans in a closed container and fumigate with carbon bisulfide at the rate of a half-ounce per cubic foot, for 24 hours. This material is very inflammable.

Russell M. 'Coke' Hall To Make Race For State Representative

On Monday, June 28, R. M. Hall of Walton publicly announced his intention of seeking the Democractic nomination for the office of State Representative for Boone and Gallatin Counties.

"Coke" as he is familiarly known throughout Northern Kentucky gave the Advertiser the following statement along with his official announcement.

"I am seeking the important office of State representative from Boone-Gallatin District No. 54 with the full realization of the responsibilities a member of the State Legislature must shoulder if elected to that body.

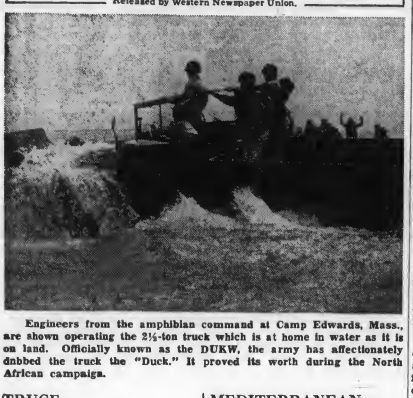
The following is a brief history of my background and accomplishments: I was born on a farm a few miles southeast of Williamstown in Grant County, Kentucky, and my early childhood followed closely the established pattern of a farmer's son in this locality. My education was started at Williamstown, from which high school I was graduated in 1924 and later attended the University of Kentucky and business school at Y. M. C. A. in Cincinnati. After finishing business school several months were spent as assistant cashier of the Cincinnati branch of Royal Typewriter Company. Returning to Williamstown, I was employed as store manager for The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company in several localitaies in Northern Kentucky and Southern Indiana. In the spring of 1929 I entered the employ of the predecessors of the Community Public Service Company and have held a responsible position with them since that time. The major portion of the past 14 years has been spent as district manager for the local electrict service company in Boone County. In discharging the duties of my job it has been my privilege to contact a large majority of the citizens of Boone and adjoining counties.

I believe that my background of living and dealing with farmers and residents of rural communities together with the experience gained as a business head, render me competent to discharge the duties of your State Representative. I have tried over a period of years to be identified with any and every worthwhile enterprise looking to the betterment of the community. I earnestly solicit the support and vote of each and every citizen of Boone and Gallatin counties in order that I may continue to promote the prosperity of the two counties in particular and the grand old state of Kentucky in general.

Due to the present restrictions on tires and gasoline a house to house campaign cannot be arranged, so I must depend on this message to earnestly solicit the support of each and every voter, but between now and August 7th a sincere effort will be made to contact as many citizens as is possible.

Sheep Shearing To Be Complete By Saturday

Sheep shearing in Boone County should be completed by Saturday of this week according to the county agent's office. This year establishes a record for late shearing in the county.



The late clipping is due to an acute labor shortage combined with the late spring that kept farmers hustling to get their crops planted. Commercial shearers were the salvation in most cases. Lebus Stephenson of Walton, did a wonderful job of clipping approximately 550 sheep the past week. Roscoe Akins, Lamar Congleton and Melvin Kelly also helped the past week. Many farmers were forced to take time from their rushed farm work in order to shear their sheep, suffering from the hot weather.

It is hoped that all sheep will be sheared in time for wool delivery by the Boone County Wool Pool. A record clip is expected to be delivered through the pool this year.

TRUCE:
In Coal Mines

Under an agreement reached by Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes and John L. Lewis, the nation's 500,000 coal miners returned to the pits to work under a new truce expiring October 31. According to the announcement, production will be resumed under the terms of the old contract, which presumably include concessions granted by the War Labor board amounting to 23 cents a day.

The agreement followed Lewis' contention that the miners would return to work for the government only, which took over the supervision of the pits as a result of the first strike threat. Under arrangements, however, the government named the operators to run the mines and receive the profits.

Termination of the latest strike left the "portal-to-portal" pay issue up in the air. Lewis has argued for such pay, which represents compensation to the miners for time spent traveling to and from their working stations. The WLB declared it had no authority to pass on the question, suggesting court action or decision by the fair labor standards bureau of the government.

Possibility that Lewis might follow some such course was hinted in the miners' statement announcing their return to work.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO:
New Experience

July 1, 1943, will long be remembered in the United States. For, history will show that on that date, millions of American taxpayers will have begun paying their income taxes as they go instead of waiting till March 15 of the following year to settle their accounts with Uncle Sam.

Under the new pay-as-you-go system, employers will deduct 20 per cent from employees' wages or salaries. Farmers and others who obtain income from sources other than wages or salaries must estimate their yearly earnings and then make quarterly payments. In all cases, payments will be made after legal exemptions.

The pay-as-you-go law forgives all taxes for 1942 or 1943, whichever is lower, up to $50, and 75 per cent of all taxes above that figure. Although a person may not have to pay an income tax, the 3 per cent victory tax will be deducted from his check.

GERMANY:
Industries Hit

Eight hundred RAF bombers clouded the sky in a heavy raid on the German industrial center of Krefeld even as British bombers returned from an assault on Friedrichshafen farther to the south.

First used at Krefeld last fall, block-busters again were poured on the German city, center of special steel and parachute textile production. Site of hard coal mining, Krefeld also is known for its sulphur output. The British admitted the loss of 44 planes.

In attacking Friedrichshafen, the RAF blasted the former Zeppelin works housing a factory producing radio location equipment similar to the U. S. "radar." Hits were observed on all main buildings, including a huge hangar.

MEDITERRANEAN:
Warn Italy of Bombings

As Lieut.-Gen. Carl A. Spaatz stated that the Allies now could obtain air supremacy in the Mediterranean by concentrating their superior forces in any given locale, the Italian people were warned that their industrial centers would continue to be pounded as long as they produced goods for the Axis.

Commander of the North African air forces, General Spaatz said that any barrier before Allied troops could be reduced by the proper use of full air power.

Urging Italian workers to move with their families from factory areas, Allied radio broadcasts declared "Our airmen will bomb your war industries and communications as relentlessly as they have bombed your ports and ships during the African campaign."

Continuing their aerial assault, Allied planes, paced by British Wellingtons, plastered Sicily. Block busters were dropped on Messina, the terminal point for the ferry from Italy, and Sicilian airdromes. Meanwhile, the Italians were reported evacuating the civilian population from both Sicily and Sardinia.

RUSSIA:
Second Anniversary

On the eve of the second anniversary of the German invasion of Russia, the Reds called on the Allies to open up a second front in the west and claimed that 6,400,000 Nazis had fallen in action against them.

Declaring that delay in opening up a second front would only protract the war, the Reds said this would mean "a colossal increase in victims." The Reds also stated that they had reinforced their war economy with the erection of hundreds of new factories behind the lines.

In addition to Nazi losses in personnel, the Reds claimed they had knocked out 42,400 tanks; 43,000 planes, and 56,500 guns. They placed their own losses at 30,000 tanks; 23,000 planes, and 35,000 guns.

In discussing international relations, the Reds praised their coalition with Britain and the United States, adding "The Hitlerites' aim to split this coalition failed."

CORN:
Seek Stocks

In an effort to get corn moving to processors and manufacturers, Food Administrator Chester Davis named a committee representing all branches of the industry to work with him in breaking up the bottleneck.

Producers, traders and millers were brought together in the committee as Davis determined to attack the problem from all angles instead of considering it piece-meal.

According to reports, the conferees were studying a variety of proposals, chief among which was a plan that would limit the feeding of hogs to certain weights, and put the 1943 corn crop on an allocation basis, assuring processors' and manufacturers' needs first.

Other proposals studied included the cancellation of ceiling prices on corn; subsidizing farmers to release their farm stocks, and the requisition of terminal elevator supplies and allocation of such supplies among hard-pressed milling and mixing firms.

PACIFIC:
Supremacy on Guadalcanal

Braced by the arrival of Lockheed Lightnings and Vought Corsair figbter planes manned by experienced pilots, the Allies have achieved air superiority in the Solomons.

Work has been completed on the big air base of Henderson Field on Guadalcanal, and except for repair facilities, it is said to compare with the largest in the U. S. Meanwhile, the Japs have been bombed out of their forward aerial positions of Munda and Vila, 200 miles to the northwest.

Although the Jap Zero remains a formidable weapon, the Lockheed, with a climb over 30,000 feet, and the Vought, with a maximum efficiency between 20,000 and 30,000 feet, are not only proving better in performance but are also more heavily armored and gunned.

RACE RIOTS:
Spread to Detroit

With its attention to race riots first attracted by the "zoot-suit" uprisings in California, the federal government was forced to step in to quell outbreaks between blacks and whites which threw Detroit into an uproar.

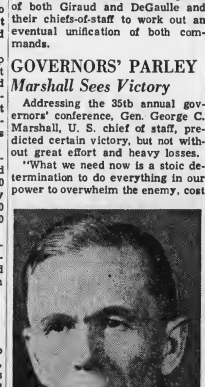
Before 2,300 soldiers arrived in jeeps, trucks and armored cars to restore order, 23 people had died and 600 had been injured. Hundreds had been arrested and confined in the city's jails.

The trouble started after an altercation between whites and Negroes at the Belle Isle beach, then was fanned into flames with the spread of the erroneous rumor through the colored district that a Negro woman and child bad been killed. Racial groups gathered quickly, stoning private cars and public trams and then beating the occupants.

When Detroit police could no longer control the situation, Gov. Harry Kelly of Michigan appealed to President Roosevelt for federal intervention. The President ordered the dispatch of the troops.

FREE FRENCH:
Agreement Reached

American and British insistence on settlement of the Free French wrangle resulted in the establishment of Gen. Henri Giraud as commander-in-chief of all French forces in North and West Africa. Gen. Charles DeGaulle was named leader of the forces in other French possessions in Syria and East Africa.



The appointment represented a victory for the Giraud faction, since the territories put under bis wing are among the richest and most strategic of French possessions and contain the bulk of the French army. Furthermore, Giraud's leadership in the territory allows him a free hand in the disposition of many military commanders to whom De-Gaulle was bostile.

At the time it announced the dual arrangement, the French national committee also revealed it had set up a military delegation composed of both Giraud and DeGaulle and their chiefs-of-staff to work out an eventual unification of both commands.

GOVERNORS' PARLEY
Marshall Sees Victory

Addressing the 35th annual governors' conference, Gen. George C. Marshall, U. S. chief of staff, predicted certain victory, but not without great effort and heavy losses.

"What we need now is a stoic determination to do everything in our power to overwhelm the enemy, cost what it may, to reduce bim to a supplicant under the impact of aroused and determined democracies," General Marshall said.

GEN. GEORGE C. MARSHALL

Although Tunisia gave the Allies an invaluable pattern for future operations, General Marshall said, the coming battle of Europe will not be a setup. Water-borne movements always produce complications, be declared, and they are merely a prelude to the heavy fighting remaining once the land has been reached.

JAP CURFEW:
Upheld by Supreme Court

In unanimous decision, the Supreme court affirmed the right of a military commander in imposing a curfew on Japanese residents of the Pacific coast in March, 1942.

Two American citizens of Japanese ancestry contested the army's action as applying against them as well as aliens. Of the 110,000 Japanese affected, 70,000 were citizens.

The court ruled the army had no time to make distinctions.

NEW FAR EASTERN DRIVE

It now seems certain that we will concentrate on the Far East to a much greater degree than most people expected.

U. S. naval officials had been privately skeptical of British co-operation in the Far East and never expected Churchill to come through. However, he and Roosevelt both agreed that the time had arrived for vigorous operations to stop the Japs before they dug in so deeply on the Pacific islands that it would take years to dislodge them.

The British bave now given definite commitments regarding certain operations. This is important. It so happens that the British do not promise easily. Our own top strategists are inclined to make promises quickly, but sometimes bave to explain them away when conditions change and it is obvious they cannot be kept. But the Britisb, though awfully hard to pin down, bave absolutely kept their agreements when once made.

What these commitments are remain a military secret. However, certain moves which are known to all, including the Japs, should give Tokyo plenty to worry about. For it is no accident that Admiral Nimitz, commander in the Pacific, baa been recalled for conferences; or that the insatiable Australian prime minister has now said he was satisfied; or that Attu was taken.

All these straws in the wind point to hitting Japan from many different directions—Alaska, Australia, Burma and the Central Pacific.

This offensive in the Far East may be one substitute for a second front in western Europe. It may not knock Hitler out of the war quite so soon, but it may make the two wars—in Europe and Asia—finish at more nearly the same time.

SAVING UNCLE SAM'S SHEKELS

Here is a simple suggestion which would save the government millions:

As the law stands, a man coming into the government cannot be hired for the figure of $5,000 or $6,000, but must get one or another of the fixed government ratings, such as $4,600 or $5,600 or $6,500.

Many a man has come to Washington from the business world in the last few years, willing to work for $5,000. But there is no government rating at that figure, so be is offered $4,600, and if be won't take that, he must be paid $5,600.

Likewise, if he is a $7,000 man, willing to work for that figure but not for less, be must be given $8,000.

Literally hundreds of men bave come into the War Production at salaries $500 or $1,000 more than they would have accepted, simply because the Reclassification Act of 1923 establishes the figures of $4,600, $5,600 and $6,500 with no elasticity.

The same waste results in the field of promotion. To keep good men these days, government agencies are obliged to give promotions without waiting for the 2½ year period required by Civil Service.

So the agencies resort to evasion. They reclassify the employee by writing up a new job for him at a bigher salary level. He might be satisfied with a $500 raise, but reclassification means that he gets at least $900 more, or even $1,500 more.

A simple change in the law would save bundreds of dollars in thousands of cases.

AMERICAN TAXI-DRIVERS

Some political prognosticators say you can predict the outcome of U. S. elections by the reaction of taxi-drivers. However, the character of taxi-drivers may go even further and be an index of the general bonesty and temperament of the American people.

OWI's Katherine C. Blackburn struck a bopping mad taxi-driver in New York the other day. He had just found $1,200 in war savings stamps which somebody had left in his cab. When be traced the "fare" and returned the stamps, all he got was congratulations on his honesty and a 25-cent tip.

"I'll never be honest again!" be declared grimly.

This brought him and Miss Blackburn to the Ritz Carlton. Sbe got out, paid her fare, and tripped into the hotel. While she was still in the lobby, somebody tapped her on the elbow.

"Excuse me, miss," said a voice, "but you left your furs in my taxi!"

Governments' Philosophy Set Forth in New Fantasy

Antoine de Saint-Exupery's Delightful Fairy Story, "The Little Prince," Holds More Than Artistry for Adult and Child Alike.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

On a June day, when a gentle breeze brought the scent of newmown grass in through the White House windows, President Roosevelt sat at his desk and read slowly to a group of correspondents from a typewritten sheet. It wasn't a formal document but it was an historic one—its purpose was to remind the Italian people that the military campaign against them which had just scored another Allied victory, Pantelleria, was the result of the misconduct of their rulers.

The message has been variously interpreted since, but to me, It contained one significant point—the reminder of the coming birth of a new nation; the new Italy which will emerge when the chains of arrogance and brute aggression which bind ber are broken. There has been much talk about post-war policing of the re-made world; little thought of the philosophy which will underlie the forms which the reborn governments must follow. To me, such a philosophy is set forth in a work of pure fantasy. A bopeful note for nations and men is sounded in this delightful fairy tale by an author who found spiritual rebirth in the tragedy of the fall of his own nation.

I refer to Antoine de Saint-Exupery and his latest work, "The Little Prince."

Those who have read his "Night Flight," "Wind, Sand and Stars" and "Flight to Arras" are not surprised that be could create a fairy tale as delicate as this. Reviewers have disagreed as to whether it is for children or for adults. I believe it is for both, like "Alice in Wonderland." But the adult will find in "The Little Prince" something more than artistry and the children will sense that, too, I think.

Saint-Exupery is a brilliant aviator who built up night flying for the French airlines in South America. He fought against the Germans—"Flight to Arras" is the remarkable book which tells of that experience. He is now back with the French army in Africa, scene of the opening of "The Little Prince."

The Prince's Story

"Six years ago," the author says, "I made a forced landing in the Sahara alone, a thousand miles from help, and faced the necessity of repairing my motor by myself within the number of days my drinking water would last. The first morning, I was awakened by a determined but gentle voice which said: 'If you please, draw me a sheep.'"

So Exupery learned the story of how the Little Prince bad found out what is really important in life.

The Little Prince is at once a delicate wisp of fancy, something so sheer that at moments he seems to float like a piece of thistledown before your imagination—again, he has all the reality of truth itself, he is eternal childhood, all that is gentle, and confiding and lovable, with the faint sbadow of sorrow on his winsome face, be is the tug at your heartstrings that comes when youth looks at you in wide-eyed confidence, reaches up to take your band—the same reminiscent tug when you look back and see the surprised and longing sorrow in the eyes of your own lost youth.

The Little Prince lived far away, it seems, on a tiny planet with three volcanoes so small that be cooked his breakfast on one of them. A flower came to his planet and the Little Prince loved her and cared for ber but he couldn't understand her and so he left to try to find out why. He finally reached the earth, and bere the fox taught bim.

The Little Prince had never seen a fox—"Come and play with me," he said, "I am so unhappy." "I cannot play with you," the fox said, "I am not tamed." The Little Prince did not understand. He told the fox that he was looking for friends and asked him what tame meant.

Philosophy of a Fox

"It is an act too often neglected," said the fox, "it means to establish ties . . . to me, you are still nothing but a little boy wbo is just like a hundred other little boys. And I have no need of you. To you, I am nothing more than a fox like a hundred thousand other little foxes. But if you tame me, then we shall need each other. To me, you will be unique in the whole world. To you, I sball be unique in the whole world."

"I am beginning to understand," said the Little Prince, "there is a flower . . . I think she bas tamed me."

"If you tame me," the fox went on, "it will be as if the sun came to shine on my life. I shall know the sound of a step that will be different from all others. Other steps send me hurrying back underneath the ground. Yours will call me like music out of my burrow. And then look: you see the grain fields down yonder. I do not eat bread. Wheat is of no use to me. The grain fields say nothing to me and that is sad. But you have hair that is the color of gold. Think how wonderful that will be when you have tamed me. The grain which is also golden will bring me back the thought of you. And I shall love to listen to the wind in the wheat . . ."

The fox gazed at the Little Prince for a long time. "Please—tame me," he said. "I want to very much," said the Little Prince, "but I baven't much time, I have friends to discover and a great many things to understand."

"One only understands the things one tames," said the fox, "men have no more time to understand anything. They buy things already made at the shops but there is no shop anywhere where one can buy friendship, and so men have no friends any more. If you want a friend, tame me . . ."

And so the Little Prince did, and another day when he came back, the fox said: "It would have been better if you had come back at the same hour. If, for example, you come at four o'clock in the afternoon, then at three o'clock I shall begin to be happy. I shall feel happier and happier as the bour advances. At four o'clock, I shall already be worrying and jumping about. I shall sbow you how happy I am. But if you come just anytime, I shall never know at what hour my heart is to be ready to greet you."

But finally, the Little Prince bad to go.

"Ah," said the fox, "I shall cry."

Source of Comfort

"It is your own fault," said the Little Prince, "I never wished you any sort of harm; but you wanted me to tame you." "Yes, that is so," said the fox. "Then It has done you no good at all." "It has done me good," said the fox, "because of the color of the wheat fields."

And there, I think, perhaps some of you may find comfort—in the memories that come from the wheat fields, for the common and the beautiful things that remind you of someone from whom, perbaps this war bas parted you.

That is only a flash I have given you of the story of "The Little Prince" which is not written for children only but for those who have the faith of little children and the understanding to see bow tragedy can bring forth something which can light the long shadows whicb it leaves—out of the tragedy of bis nation and the searchings of bis own soul came this charming fantasy from the pen of the soldier-writer with the secret he learned from the Little Prince who learned it from the fox—

"It is only with the heart that one can see rightly; what is essential is invisible to the eye."

The modern weaver has an assortment of colors in warp and filler that may be used with the rags that you have prepared in the manner shown here. About one and three quarter pounds of sewn rags will be required for a square yard of carpet. Rugs may be either cotton or wool but do not use both in the same rug. The rags should be soft and clean and hems or uneven finishes should be removed. Dye white rags the colors you wish to predominate.

Speaking of Sports

by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

JUST why the Chicago Cubs have spent most of this season as a National league tail-end club is a question that baffles almost every baseball observer.

There is no logical reason why the Cubs should be a cellar team. General Manager Jim Gallagher has been quoted as saying he is unable to determine why the team has been eighth best most of the recent weeks of the season. Some rather smart baseball experts are completely mystified at the team's showing.

Jim Gallagher

One thing is certain—and only one thing. The Cubs have lost a lot more games than they have won. One day the hitting is good and there is no pitching. A couple of days later the pitching is excellent and the hitting nonexistent. Then, the next game may see the defense crumble. Occasionally everything goes to ruin during the same game. At that point the Cubs have one of their "bad" days.

But Gallagher doesn't blame Manager Jim Wilson for the various shortcomings. He insists the Cubs have as good a spirit as any Cub team he's seen. And Gallagher, as general manager of the club, is Wilson's boss.

To date there have been no stories of club dissension—the usual prelude to a managerial change. Even the most bitter critics of the Gallagher - Wilson regime haven't hinted—at least out loud—that the Cubs are anything less than a fairly happy ball club.

Neither Gallagher nor Wilson have given up the thought that their boys will be pennant contenders before the season winds up in October. The Big Four pitching staff, including Claude Passeau, Lon Warneke, Bill Lee and Paul Derringer, have shown signs of strength recently, in great contrast to the horrible earlier weeks of the season.

It has been charged that Wilson doesn't get excited about losing. In other words, he grew too accustomed to the short end of the score during his years as a Phillie player and manager. He adjusted himself to defeat with no great pain. Gallher denies this and insists that Wilson hates to lose as much as any manager in the big leagues.

Jim Wilson

Gallagher probably is right. No man likes to lose. And Wilson likely is as optimistic as any other manager. But his optimism has suffered many a staggering blow during the past months. Whether or not he will come through unscathed is a debatable question.

Sarazen's Donation

To a rather weird looking iron club now resting in the museum of the United States Golf association, today's low-scoring golfers owe a debt of gratitude.

The club is sort of a mongrel job which Gene Sarazen donated to golf's hall of fame for inanimate objects. It is one which helped him win the American Open and British championships in 1932 and which is largely responsible for the low scores of the present day.

The club head resembles that of a niblick, except that it has a heavy flange at the bottom. Frequent applications of lead have made it even heavier. No thing of beauty, Sarazen's masterpiece resembles something that might be carried by a sportsman-bandit.

It's the forerunner of the present-day sand iron. And Sarazen well remembers its history:

"Back in 1932 I had an idea that the sand club Bobby Jones was using, with concave space, was illegal. It was subsequently ruled so. I set about to devise a sand iron of my own.

"I finally came up with this club with the flanged sole. I made it myself. That year I broke the scoring record in winning the British Open and tied the record in winning the National Open.

"In about three weeks there were 40,000 copies of the club being made and distributed, and I think that the low scoring since that time can be traced to that club. It eliminates paralysis in the bunkers, and made the good players all masters of bunker play."

Sarazen always was a bold player, and it is said that he became so proficient with the club that he would bet he could get out of a trap and down in one putt four out of five times.

In taking the 1932 British Open, Sarazen had rounds of 70, 69, 70 and 74 for a 283 total—two strokes better than the tournament record. That same year he had a poor start in the National Open with a 74 and 76 on his first two rounds. He came in with a 70 for the third tour and fired a blazing 66 for the windup and a total of 286.

To Your Good Health

by DR. JAMES W. BARTON

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

LOW BACK PAIN

For many years cases for low back pain and sciatica have been put in two classes (a) those due to infection—teeth, tonsils, gums, gall bladder and other organs and (b) those due to injury—lifting a heavy object, a misstep, swinging at an object (often a golf ball) and missing it, a fall, braking a car and other accidents. The injury usually causes a strain or sprain of the ligaments and other structures surrounding the joint between the last bone of the spine and the hip bone. This is called sacro-iliac sprain.

Dr. Barton

During the past three or four years we are learning that many of these cases called sacro-iliac sprain are really cases where the little cushions or disks between the bones of the spine have been broken through or ruptured by the same type of accident which causes the sacro-iliac sprain. It is only after the usual treatment—manipulation under an anesthetic and use of a brace—has failed to give relief that ruptured disk is suspected. Each spine bone is called a vertebra and the disk or cushion between them is an intervertebral disk.

Dr. W. E. Dandy in Annals of Surgery, Philadelphia, points out that rupture of the intervertebral disk accounts for an overwhelming percentage of the heretofore incurable and untreatable low back pains and sciatica, miscalled sacro - iliac strains and arthritis of the spine.

Formerly lodized oil was injected into the spinal canal, but this does not always show the rupture even when present. Then as it was found that practically all (90 per cent) of ruptured disks were situated between the last and second to last spine bone in lower back, the lodized oil method is not absolutely necessary, particularly because it is known that a "concealed" disk occurs in 25 per cent of cases. Dr. Dandy has been able to make the diagnosis of ruptured disk 63 times just by examination without use of lodized oil.

Cases of ruptured intervertebral disks are now successfully treated by operation.

However, there is the other side of this matter; that is that many patients and some physicians also, may now make the mistake of thinking that most cases of low back pain and sciatica are due to ruptured disks. As a matter of fact, sacro-iliac strain occurs more often than does ruptured disk and manipulation, rest and use of a brace bring about a cure.

Watch for Early Diabetes Symptoms

There has come to me a copy of the Diabetic Digest, published quarterly by the Philadelphia Metabolic society. This magazine has spread information among physicians so that physicians would be on the lookout for early and unrecognized cases of diabetes. Thus the level of treatment of this disease has been raised in Philadelphia and vicinity.

The facts about diabetes in Philadelphia that have been forwarded to physicians might well be studied by everybody because diabetes strikes many homes. Some of the information is not pleasant; "other information brought out by the study is most encouraging to diabetics and to doctors."

1. Two and five-tenths persons per day die and have diabetes mentioned in their death certificate.

2. One person dies in diabetic acidosis (coma) almost every other day.

3. Almost twice as many persons died of diabetic acidosis (coma) as died with infections of various natures without acidosis.

4. One-half of the persons dying with diabetes did not know of their disease until their last illness.

5. More persons died with diabetes of causes other than diabetes (but having diabetes) than died of diabetes alone.

It is the hope of the committee that other county societies throughout the state and the nation will take up this work and that diabetic individuals will lead longer, more useful and happier lives because of these efforts.

Just how much can be accomplished by the new knowledge of the treatment of diabetes by diet and insulin is shown by the fact that in 1910 average age at death of the diabetic was about 44 years and in 1936 it was 58 years.

QUESTION BOX

Q.—I have blue marks on each arm. How can I get rid of them?

A.—These blue marks may be tiny broken veins. They will do no harm. They may be removed by electrolysis or surgery.

Q.—I am 24 years old and I take spells. When these happen I seem to get in an electric state all over. Is this serious?

A.—As you do not become unconscious, spells may not be serious. Ask your physician about them.

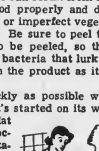
Use a Water-Bath for Canning Tomatoes, Fruits
(See Recipe Below)

Try Canning!

Many homemakers who have never done so before will be hard at work doing some old - fashioned "putting up" this summer. Not only will it be economical to put up your own Victory garden's surplus, but also it will be a vital step in stretching those precious points next winter.



Canning's simpler today and much of the spoilage that occurred formerly can be prevented if the homemaker checks the causes of spoilage. There's a reason for every type of spoilage, and what's more important, every one of them can be prevented if she's careful.

First, it's not smart to use leftover produce that you wouldn't eat at the table. Select only prime fruit and vegetables in perfect condition. Best quality goes into commercial canning, and so it should for home canning. Get out into the garden early in the morning to get vegetables and fruits and can immediately, or if you market, tie a bandana on your hair and go out early in the morning to get your produce while it's still fresh.

Cleanliness is another important factor. Remember that food spoils for other reasons than that the jar is not air-tight. More spoilage than you ever dreamed of can result from not washing the food properly and discarding bruised or imperfect vegetables and fruits. Be sure to peel the food, if it is to be peeled, so that no dirt and the bacteria that lurk in it get rubbed in the product as it is peeled.

Work as quickly as possible with the food once it's started on its way to the can. Flat sour, which occurs in vegetables, can often develop in vegetables, for example, if the jars in which the precooked food is placed stand too long before processing. Too much delay in handling food from one step to the other may cause a great loss of vitamins and minerals.

Do as much preparation ahead of time as possible like checking equipment and getting together jars which are examined for imperfections and nicks. Wash all jars and caps in soapy suds (not in cool dishwater after the breakfast dishes!) and scald or sterilize them.

Select Day for Canning.

If there's a huge quantity of food to be canned, it would be a good idea to round up as many friends and neighbors to help, and to do the canning on a community basis. In many towns, pressure cookers which are necessary for canning non-acid vegetables, are available at the canning center. Then, if all produce must be canned in a single day, it will be necessary to recruit as much help as possible from others in your community and give them your time when needed.

Canning day should be canning day only, not laundry day, general cleaning and baking day, too. It's better, too, not to be overly ambitious and try to do three bushels of tomatoes, all in one sweep, for you will do better with a small quantity, and feel less tired, even though it may take several days in which to finish.

Processing Foods.

Fruits and vegetables need processing which means the application of heat to the product for a certain definite period of time. You just can't put fruit into jars, seal and store and expect them to stay in perfect condition.

Water-Bath Method.

In some cases, when pressure cookers are not obtainable, a water-bath may be used for vegetables and meats. However, the water-bath is more preferable for tomatoes (which are acid, and technically a fruit) and fruits.

To make a water bath, use a large wash boller or deep vessel fitted with a rack made of laths, perforated material or galvanized wire. Have a tight fitting cover.

Place prepared jars on the rack which must hold them at least ½ inch above bottom of the canner. The water bath should be filled with boiling water which comes at least an inch or two above the tops of the jars. Jars on the rack should not touch each other. Start counting processing time as soon as water around jars begins to bubble, and keep it boiling during entire processing period. If necessary, add boiling water, if it boils away, for the water must always be boiling at least an inch above the tops of the jars.

Here are some recipes for common fruits and vegetables:

Tomatoes.

Scald tomatoes in boiling water 1 minute. Soak in cold water 1 minute, peel, core, quarter and pack into clean, sterile jars. Add no water. Add a teaspoon of salt to each quart of tomatoes. Put on band and screw band firmly tight. Process in hot water bath for 35 minutes.

Peas.

Shell, grade peas, using only prime quality. Pre-cook 3 to 7 minutes depending on size. Pack loosely, adding hot water to within 1 inch of top. Adjust cap and process in pressure cooker, 60 minutes at 10 pounds, or 180 minutes in hot water bath.

Beets.

Use small, uniform beets. Wash carefully. Leave the roots and stems long. Boil 15 minutes. Plunge into cold water, remove the skins and pack into clean jars. Add 2 teaspoons of salt and sugar mixture to each quart jar if desired. Fill to within ½ inch of top, with boiling water. Put on cap, screwing band firmly tight. Process in hot-water bath 120 minutes or in pressure cooker 40 minutes at 10 pounds.

Successful Canning: It is easy to do the right thing with foods to be put up in cans if you know the principles and follow directions.

Follow the slogan, "two hours from garden to kettle." Use only fresh, firm, ripe rather than overripe produce. Wash all foods carefully before attempting any preparation.

Check jars, rubbers if used, and caps along with equipment before you start canning. Work at the range as much as possible to save time between steps. Have sterile jars on one side of range, fill them from kettle on stove (or from colander near stove, if using fruit which is not pre-cooked), and place immediately in water bath or pressure cooker or oven.

Jars should be washed in a pan of soapy suds and scalded, inverted on a clean towel until used.

A PEOPLE IN DISTRESS

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 1:6-14; 2:23-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—They cried, and their cry came up unto God by reason of the bondage.—Exodus 2:23.

Today is Independence Day. Yet much of the world is in bondage, and the rest of it in a struggle to prevent freedom from perishing from the earth.

Our lesson too is about a nation in bondage, but we learn from it that there is a way to be free. Even so we declare the way of personal liberty which is open and free.

The Lord Jesus Christ opened it at Calvary's tree and anyone who is still the bond slave of Satan may make this a great and glorious Independence Day by now declaring his faith in the Deliverer of our souls.

We begin today a series of lessons in the book of Exodus which reveal the high and mighty hand of God working on behalf of His people.

The family of Jacob—or, as the Bible calls them, the children of Israel—prospered in Egypt particularly as long as Joseph and the rulers who remembered him were alive. But they soon learned one of life's bitter lessons, that—

I. Prosperity Is Not Always a Blessing (1:6-11).

The Hebrews were a peaceful, law-abiding people. They were God's chosen people, and as He blessed them they prospered, and thus innocently they brought upon themselves the hatred of the suspicious Egyptians.

Prosperity is never an unmixed blessing. We as a nation know that to be true. Not only does it lead to a certain softening of the sinews, but all too often it results in a weakening of the moral fiber, which makes man easy prey to the attack of the enemy of our souls.

Is it not strange, then, that we should—even in times of all-out warfare—be so eager to chase the dollar that we are willing to neglect our children, forget church, live unnatural lives, just that we may make more and more money?

The Egyptians had, humanly speaking, reason to fear this great nation which was growing up in their midst. The new rulers did not know Joseph and had forgotten the spirit in which he had brought his family into the land. The leaders of the Egyptians therefore made plans which appealed to their brilliant leaders as politic and wise. But they reckoned without God, and the burdens and afflictions they placed on the Israelites only served to bring further blessing.

So Israel learned a lesson which our present sorry world can profit by, that—

II. Persecution Is Not Always a Burden (vv. 12-14).

The people of Israel did not appreciate it, but the bitterness of their bondage was a blessing in disguise. Note that—

1. It Kept Them Separate as a People. Affliction often serves to keep God's people separated from the world. It is doing so today.

2. It Disciplined Them and Prepared Them for the Hardships of Their Wilderness Journey. We too do well to remember that "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and that if we are properly "exercised" thereby, our sorrows may yield rich fruit in our lives.

3. It Threw Them Back upon God. Many are the saints of God who have found that the fiery trial, the burden so hard to understand, or some affliction of their body, has caused them to bring their burden to the Lord. We have traveled far on the road of faith when we have reached the place where we learn that "man's extremity is God's opportunity."

They had only one place to turn. They were hemmed in on every side, but, as ever, they found that the way up no man can close. They called on their God.

III. Prayer Always Brings Deliverance (2:23-25).

Does God really know when His people suffer? Does He really care? Yes, He does. "They cried," and "God heard" and "remembered." That's all we need to know. The groaning of His people had already stirred God's gracious and tender heart. But He waited to hear their cry before He answered. Such is the law of prayer. May we not forget it. Far too often we turn to everyone and everything else, and finally, in desperation, to God. Why not turn to Him first?

Does God hear and answer prayer? Yes, but remember that real prayer is the cry of faith coming from the heart of an obedient child. God may answer other prayers, but He always answers such a prayer.

His answer may not be in accord with our opinion of what it should be, for His wisdom is infinite. He knows better than we what the answer should be. Let us trust the Judge of all the earth to do right (Gen. 18:25).

Admirals may be admirable, but that isn't where the word comes from. It comes from an old Arabic word "amir-al" meaning "commander of." That's what the Admiral is, the top-ranking officer in the Navy. Top-ranking cigarette with our Navy men is Camel—the favorite, too with men in the Army, Marines, and Coast Guard, according to actual sales records from their service stores. Camels are a top-ranking gift, too. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

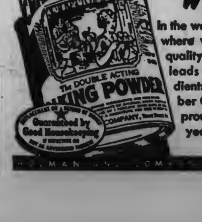
A chain of rest stations is rising across northern Brazil along the route of workers trekking into the Amazon Basin gateway of Belem to increase collection of wild rubber. They provide medical aid and other human comforts to the 50,000 additional workers being recruited for the Amazon rubber forces.



The rubber normally used in one month's manufacture of baby pants can make 2500 rubber lifeboats for ocean-going planes.

A check of 7,200 farm-owned trucks showed that only 25 per cent of the tires on them were good; 54 per cent were fair; and 21 per cent were in poor condition.

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," one of the changless things in this changing world is God's plan of stewardship. He is the owner of all things, and since God has absoulute ownership of all of His creation, then men merely possesses it for a time. Each one is a steward either faithful or unfaithful with the means that are entrusted and the more He enables you to get, the more He wants you to do for Him. THE GARDEN

TROUBLES

This is a resume of letters that have been coming to the writer from trouble-worn gardeners, who this year appreciating more than in the past the importance of their gardens' performing, have become vocal earlier. The fact is, too, that there are many more gardeners than in other years, some of them just now learning how many pitfalls there are in the path of the producers of vegetables. So. it may be the initiates who are writing.

Cabbage—Dotted in the rows, are planted whose lower leaves are turning yellow and blue; later, black. This is the sign of black rot, and the prospects for such plants are slim, as in the end, all the leaves will have dropped off, to leave a stiff shank with a misshapen, small head atop it. The fault may lie in the plants that may have been grown in diseased land, or it may lie with the gardener who has inadvertently put his cabbage row where he had it last year, or even where he had radishes or "cabbage greens." To be rid of this trouble henceforth, home-grown plants should be used, produced from seed that has been treated, and crop rotation should be faithfully followed; there should be a "skip" of a full year.

Tomatoes—Here and there plants are reported to be turning yellow, beginning sometimes with only half-leaves affected. This is the first sign of wilt, and dry weather will make the symptoms more pronounced, and the plants' death must follow. A soil-germ disease, its only control is to use the wilt-resistant varieties, Marglobe, Pritchard and Rutgers. If such plants cannot now be procured, a packet of seed should be sown immediately, to have plants to set as late as even July 15: for, there is still time to "beat the frost."

Beans.—The adult Mexican beetles have finally come from winter quarters. The eating they do is rarely serious; nor does this matter as they cannot be killed through ordinary means. But, close in the wake of their coming, come egg-clusters, the signal for the immediate application of dust or spray, made always and only on the under-sides of the foliage. In 10 days, a second should follow, and in a week or so, perhaps a third, depending on how thoroughly the previous two were made.

FARM LABOR SUTUATION

The farm labor situation is one of the major problems confronting the farmer in his food production program.

Under the Farm Labor Program recently passed by Congress the Extension Service was assigned a part of the job of working on the Farm Labor situation in each state and each county.

To help in determining the needs in each county the Extension Service of the College of Agriculture, Lexington, Ky. has supplied the County Agent's Office with Application Blanks whereby the farmers, the farm workers, custom operators of farm machinery, and farmers who wish to trade labor, can register their labor needs.

Important to Register Now.

If you are a farmer and employ farm labor,

If you are a farm worker and desire farm work,

If you operate farm machinery and do custom work,

If you desire to exchange machinery or labor,

You should communicate with your local county agricultural agent and register, by filling one or more of the application blanks used in registering the farm labor needs. Your local county agent's office is the contact place for registering your labor needs in your county. Many of the labor problems can be worked out locally if you talk over the situation with your neighbors. Trading work is one sure way to get the job done where it takes two men to complete the job like harvesting hay and many other kinds of farm work.

WITH THE REDS

Cincinnati:—Now engaged in a lengthy road tour that would tax the stamina of lesser folk, the Cincinnati Reds will return to Crosley Field for a night game with the Chicago Cubs on July 15, and by that time they will have a better indication of how they rack up in the raging National League pennant stream.

Their current invasion of the eastern cities is an arduous expedition that calls for six double headers in four towns, three of them on consecutive days.

They were to open first in Brooklyn with a Wednesday twin bill, take on the Dodgers again in a single contest Thursday, and again on Friday.

Then come the three double features over the Independence Day week-end, with the first two slated for Saturday and Sunday against the Giants in New York, and the last one on Monday against the improved Boston Braves. Two single games will be played in Boston following that, and the Reds then conclude their journey with six games in four days at Philadelphia. All told, the Reds will appear in 19 games on the trip.

Lonny Frey, the team's sparkling second baseman, is again ready for action after more than a week's absence due to a pulled muscle in his leg. Frey's return should brace the club, although Woody Williams, who took his place, did admirably. Williams had never played the keystone until this season, and he filled in for Lonny with notable success.

The Reds have big stuff on tap at Crosley Field following their return. After the night game with the Cubs on July 15, the Reds will battle the rising Bruins in a single game on Saturday, July 17, and a double-header the following day.

Many of the Reds are expected to participate in the All-Star game which will be played at Shibe Park, Philadelphia, on Tuesday, July 30.

Fruits and Vegetables Should Not Be Wasted.

No fruits and vegetables raised in Boone County this year should be allowed to go to waste while there is need for them locally or in other parts of the country, says William H. May, Commissioner of Agriculture. With these surpluses in mind, a state-wide clearing committee has been organized under the leadership of J. Dan Baldwin, Director of the Division of Markets, Kentucky Department of Agriculture.

Any considerable surplus should be reported ten days to two weeks in advance of harvest to the Division of Markets, which will notify buyers from the large food distribution companies. This will not apply to small victory garden surplus which can best be disposed of to neighbors or local retailers. Outside sales can be arranged for good quality tomatoes, carrots, cabbage, irish potatoes, sweet potatoes and other vegetables that may be grown in considerable quantity.

Surplus products may come from market gardeners who have expanded their acreage this year, or other farmers who have gone into vegetables raising for the first time. The Division of Markets should be advised well in advance, because it will be necessary to arrange for central assembly points for the produce, as well as arange among growers for proper packing and grading.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George M. Cox Jr. March 11 Lieut. Bulkeley delivered to the squadron their secret orders to take General MacArthur's party and some additional personnel to the southern islands where they would be met by transport planes which would carry General MacArthur to his new headquarters. The weather was bad. Lieut. Kelly is speaking.

CHAPTER XI

"Shortly thereafter we were supposed to make a landfall—an island about half a mile square, at which point we must turn in order to make the final landfall which would bring us into port.

"With such a wind and sea, we were probably retarded, but by how much? I had to guess at it. Also the helmsman was having a wrestling match with the wheel—it was all he could do to keep within ten degrees on either side of the compass course—which meant a possible error of twenty degrees. We missed the island entirely in the dark, and from then on until dawn I changed course as I thought necessary. Dawn came at six and we saw land ahead, a point which I thought was the peninsula just west of Cagayan, our destination. I showed it to the Admiral, and he shook his head with satisfaction.

"We were up to top speed now, carbon burned from the motors, and at 6:30 we sighted the light on the point at Cagayan's entrance. We slowed to let the 41 boat lead the way, as it had the channel charts.

"General Sharp, commanding officer of the island of Mindanao, was down to meet us, and as soon as we could see the pier we woke up General MacArthur," said Bulkeley. "He shook the salt water out of his gold general's cap, flipped it on his head—somehow it always lands at a jaunty angle, seems to go with his cane—and looked around with his jaw set—a fine figure of a soldier.

"Then he said to me, 'Bulkeley, I'm giving every officer and man here the Silver Star for gallantry. You've taken me out of the jaws of death, and I won't forget it!'

"Still later that afternoon he told me: 'If the boats never accomplish anything more and were burned now, they'd have earned their keep a thousand times over. If possible, when I get to Melbourne I'll get you and your key men out.'

"We arrived on the thirteenth. Four flying fortresses from Australia were supposed to have met the General. One cracked up on the take-off, two came down in the Australian desert, and the one which finally arrived had supercharger trouble and had to turn around and go back without any passengers, so MacArthur didn't get away until the eighteenth.

"We told the crews to keep quiet, not to let it get out whom we'd brought in, so the Japs wouldn't find out and maybe attack while MacArthur was waiting."

"The afternoon we arrived," said Kelly, "Bulkeley told us what MacArthur had said about getting us out if he could. It was good news, but we weren't exactly excited. For if the air force couldn't get even one serviceable plane up here from Australia to take MacArthur out, what chance had we?

"Our job, I knew, would be to fight out the war in the southern islands—with torpedoes while we had them, and on land with rifles when they were expended. So better not get our hopes up.

"The boats were to be anchored off the beach, and before I left mine, I told my executive officer to check on the anchor—we were close to the beach and there was a lot of surf pounding the coral. Just to make doubly sure, I went on the forecastle for a last inspection myself. The line seemed taut. I tugged to make sure, and it came loose in my hand.

"'Start the engines immediately! They were started in fifty seconds, but five seconds later there was a grinding scrape—one propeller had hit bottom. The other engine conked out, and when we did get it going it was too late, the waves were slapping at us broadside, each breaker driving us farther and farther on the beach.

"I yelled over to the 41 boat to get under way and give us a tow but by the time we'd tied her line onto ours, we were stuck—hard and fast. We worked furiously four hours until the tide had gone out, and by midnight we were solid as concrete, in water so shallow that now there were only three feet of water aft, and less than a foot forward. Impossible to get off that night. I went to bed disgusted.

"Next morning I was up at five and there she was high and dry except for six inches of water at her stern, and a crowd of natives gawking. It all happened because the anchor shackle had parted—the threads stripped. It was the old story—continuous usage and no replacement of parts.

"Sunday, we were again up at dawn. We had persuaded the army to lend us a sergeant and a working party of native troops, and we started digging and pounding away at the coral the propellers and rudders had chewed into.

"I called the crew into the forward compartment and told them the skipper had left it up to us. I talked about what the old boat had done to date with them in it—sunk two ships and two landing boats. So now, were we going to let this be her end—sit by and watch the surf pound her to pieces? Or were we going to get her off?

"'You're damn right we're going to get her off!' they said, and someone suggested maybe we could hire work gangs of natives to help us, whereupon the whole crowd started pulling money out of their pockets and piling it on the table. They'd had no pay since the start of the war, but since they'd been down here in Mindanao, they'd had shore leave and a chance to play poker with the army. The government could cut the cost of the war by just paying the army and then giving the sailors a chance to play poker with them.

"We hired what men we could, and all of us got to work with them digging out those razor-sharp coral boulders with our naked hands. But there were other boulders fifty yards out. We got some dynamite and worked all one afternoon pounding holes in them and blowing them up. With our money we hired natives driving carabao to pull pieces away, at the rate of one peso for the native and another for the carabao.

"We were about ready now for the test," said Lieutenant Kelly. "Another army tug showed up. We hitched a line onto it, we bridled the wheelhouse of the first tug with a line, and as the tide came in we took soundings. The 34 boat needed five foot of water to float—that meant we'd had to dig a two-foot hole under her—had we done it?

"All of us got to work digging out those coral boulders."

"High tide was nine o'clock at night. At 8:45 the two tugs started a steady pull; she didn't budge. The water churned as we took soundings. As nine approached, we signaled the tugs to give everything they had. At 9:03 the 34 gave a sudden lurch—she was free and would fight once more! But first something had to be done about her back end—rudders, struts, and propellers were a jumble of bent steel.

"Before he left for Del Monte the skipper had told us he'd heard of a little machine shop up the coast at Anaken which might possibly have tools to straighten out steel if by some miracle we got her free. So we begged a tug from an army colonel to tow us up there. We were gone ten days, and I missed one of the high spots of the whole campaign while we were gone."

"It wasn't much," Bulkeley insisted. "Just one of those things where they thank you if you do it, but give you hell if you fail. The army called me in and said that President Quezon was over on Negros Island, and if he could be brought over here, they hoped to get him to Australia by plane. The trip to Negros was risky—seven Jap destroyers were loose in the vicinity. Probably to cut off Quezon's escape. So they weren't going to order it.

"So we left at seven o'clock—I was in the 41 boat and Akers was commanding the 35. Off Apo Island, we sighted one Jap destroyer, but luckily she didn't see us and we could dodge around the island in time. It was one o'clock when we entered Dumaguete—it was pitch-dark; both the town and the harbor were blacked out. We had no chart —I'd never been there before—and when we pulled up to the pier—no Presidente! However, his side, Major Soriano, was there to meet us. He said three hours ago, after we had already left Mindanao, Quezon had got a telegram from General Wainwright ordering him to cancel the trip—there were so many Jap craft in the neighborhood it was too risky. But Soriano said as long as I was here, maybe we could go over to the President's home—it was about forty-five kilometers away—and he might change his mind. We went ripping over there in Soriano's car at sixty miles an hour. Quezon was up, dressed, and considerably interested. He listened to us, looked me over very carefully—I had a long black beard then, which must have been quite impressive—and finally said he'd go. (Later on when he saw me in Melbourne, shaved, he said he'd never disregarded Wainwright's orders if he'd known he was riding with a mere child of thirty.) Anyway, Quezon and his family were loaded into cars and we were off.

"Meanwhile I'd left Akers on patrol outside the harbor. If a Jap destroyer came nosing around, I didn't want him to cut off our retreat and figured Akers could handle him."

"I was riding back and forth, about two miles offshore in my 35 boat," said Akers, "keeping my eyeballs peeled for any of these seven Jap destroyers, when all of a sudden there was a thud and a splintering noise—we had crashed into a submerged object, a raft with metal on it apparently, which ripped a twenty-foot strip out of our bow. Water came pouring in, and we got busy with buckets and pump—"

"—and kept right on with your patrol —" said Bulkeley — "which took plenty of guts."

"The water kept gaining on us, but we thought we could hold it until Bulkeley got back with Quezon to the pier, although I knew we could never get her back to Mindanao in that condition. When I saw the lights of the car I figured it was safe to come into the harbor. She was sinking fast then, so we left her in a place where she would drift on the sand and in the morning the army could salvage her machine guns. Then we all climbed aboard the 41 boat with Bulkeley and the Quezon party. You might say that was the end of the 35 boat, and yet it wasn't quite, although she fought her last fight. Bulkeley was working frantically to keep the squadron together. A few days later he came over, plugged the hole temporarily, and towed her back to Cebu, where we hoisted her on the marine railway for repairs. We burned her just before the Japs came into the town."

"The trip back with Quezon was as rough as I'll ever see," said Bulkeley. "We left at three o'clock with one hundred twenty miles to go before dawn. At four o'clock a big sea landed us a punch in the jaw which knocked two torpedoes loose in their tubes and instantly they started a hot run—a terrific hissing of compressed air, the propellers grinding, it sounded like the end of the world.

"In a situation like that," said Bulkeley. "The logical thing is to get them out by firing an impulse charge—touch off some black powder in the rear of the tube which sends them scooting. But we were having trouble with the mechanism —it took a minute to get this done, and meantime the two aft torpedoes were sticking out of the tubes so far they seemed about to fall, so the two torpedomen, Houlihan and Light, got out on them with their feet, hanging on by their hands to the forward tubes, and tried to kick them loose. They couldn't, but they certainly impressed President Quezon, who, when he got to Australia, gave them the Distinguished Conduct Star of the Philippines for what they did that night, as well as to Ensign Cox and me. And it was a ticklish job for the torpedomen too. Before we blew the torpedoes out, their back ends, where their motors are, turned pink and then bright red from the heat. On a normal run, of course, the surrounding water keeps them cool. But out of the water, they're not nice things to crawl around on.

"At first President Quezon didn't understand what was going on, and asked why we were getting ready to fire the two torpedoes. Not wanting to worry him unnecessarily, I said we were just firing them at the enemy, who was near by. When we got him ashore at Oroquieta, I explained that we'd really been in quite a dangerous situation.

"We found a passage through the coral reef outside Oroquieta just at dawn and found General Sharp waiting in his car. In order not to be recognized, Quezon tied a red bandanna over his face below his eyes. But the natives all knew him in spite of it—hats were waving from the sidewalk as he rode off down the street."

"We missed it all," said Kelly, "because we were up there in Anaken trying to repair the crumpled steel in our hind end at that little oversize garage hack among the bamboo which they called a machine shop. Native divers, holding their breath, took off the struts and shafts of the rudders and the propellers. We tried to pound the propellers back into shape with hammers on palm logs, while the proprietor did his best to straighten the rest in his machine shop.

"Finally there was a trial run. She'd make only 12 knots—a fraction of her normal speed—and the vibration was terrible; you'd think someone had packed an earthquake in our lazaret.

Youthful Aerialist Makes Slight Error

DENVER. — Commando John Armbeck, nine, placed a mattress atop a downtown garage, climbed to the roof of a business building near by, took a long run and jumped into space.

Hurtling 30 feet, he missed the mattress, hit the garage roof and caromed off another 15 feet to the pavement. Slightly injured.

Oddities Heard on OPA Phone Calls

Switchboard Clearing Place For Queer Messages.

CLEVELAND.—Sit yourself down at the switchboard of the regional OPA here and listen in on some of the quaint telephone calls that come in over the lines.

"I've got an invention that will win the war," an earnest male voice says. "It's a way to black out whole cities in the daytime."

After being assured that his device will not be discussed with anyone in the enemy camp, the caller goes on to explain how it works.

"It's a battery of giant sprays," he says. "At the first sound of enemy planes, the sprays go into action. They spray the city with a dark cloud of oil. The city's invisible."

Another "inventor" calls, saying Washington won't listen to him.

"I have a device that will win the war," he announces. "It's a perpetual motion machine and it will run our factories without fuel and energy."

Then there's a call from a voice that reflects 21, blonde, and blue eyes.

"I want to join the WOW," she says. "How do I go about it? By the way, is a WOW what I think she is?"

"A WOW is a woman ordnance worker," the OPA telephone operator answers.

"Ordnance, eh?" Silence . . . Then, "Is that machinery?"

"Yes."

"So that's what a WOW is? A woman factory worker. Oh, well. Never mind. Thanks."

Still another says she keeps hearing "spirits" when she turns on her radio.

"Spirits come over the air and haunt me," she complains. "They keep talking to me. I want it stopped."

Too Many Girls, Wives Bring Peck of Trouble

NEW YORK.—Two wives, a few girl friends and registration with four different draft boards proved an unhappy snarl for Benjamin Cohen, 38.

Cohen, picked up here by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, admitted he had registered at one board in Los Angeles and with two here, using the names Tucker, Lebrun and Dawson. He once registered under his real name, he said.

It wasn't that he wanted to avoid the draft, he explained, but he just wanted to avoid trouble with two wives and some girl friends. He didn't name them.

Finder and Loser Come Out Even in This Case

SAN FRANCISCO.—Mrs. Lillian Stoddart called the market to report that resting comfortably in a head of lettuce she had just bought was a $50 bill, and whose was it, please?

Soon a sailor was at her door, saying he was Tim Morris and that he had lost the fifty while buying fruit.

"You're luckier than I am," said Mrs. Stoddard as she handed him the money. "I lost my bag a few days ago but couldn't find a trace of it."

"If it's a brown purse with the initial S on it," said Morris, "I found it while scouting around for my $50."

It was hers.

Girl's $2,000 Spending Spree Winds Up in Jail

CHICAGO. — A $2,000 spending spree, punctuated by gallons of milkshakes and $30 bouquets was only a memory today for 14-year-old Anna Valentino.

Anna confessed to police that she stole $2,000 from Mrs. Sarah Glanola's flat, where she was hired to do housework. Anna said she spent all but a few dollars on clothes, shoes, and gifts for herself and her five girl friends. She consumed many chocolate milkshakes and bought $30 sprays of flowers for her mother.

She was taken to the juvenile home.

U. S. Plant Turns Out First Synthetic Rubber

BATON ROUGE, LA.—An extensive new plant built with skillful engineering economy in strategic materials turned out the government's first synthetic rubber in compact bales destined to keep Allied war machines rolling to victory.

With a 30,000-ton annual capacity, enough rubber for some four million vehicle tires, it's the first plant constructed by the government under the Baruch program to make synthetic rubber from petroleum. Private industry has had some relatively smaller units in operation for some time.

STAGE—SCREEN—RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

A LARGE detail of American soldiers stationed now at Accra, on the Gold Coast of West Africa, sat through a driving rainfall to see one of the "global" premieres of "Stage Door Canteen." Lt. Col. Flynn L. Andrew, who returned recently from an extended tour of the fighting fronts, reported on it. This was one of simultaneous showings of the picture on 38 battle fronts. It took place in an open-air theater, and a sudden rainstorm dampened the audience considerably, but not their enthusiasm.

Frank Sinatra, who's achieved such spectacular success in a year, has signed with RKO Radio; his first picture will be "Higher and Higher," in which he will he co-starred with

FRANK SINATRA

Michele Morgan. Meanwhile, he's doing fine with his new radio program—"The Frank Sinatra Show," 45 minutes a week of joy for fans who've made him "America's favorite male vocalist."

Victor Borge goes into the army in September. Not content with doing his Blue Network show and working in a picture on the MGM lot, he recently opened as a night-club entertainer at one of Hollywood's favorite spots. He explains his passion for work in this way—"I'd like to do a year's theatrical work in three months." Looks as if he'd manage it.

Jack Whiting subbed for William Gaxton on the CBS Playhouse "The Gay Divorcee" and did a fine job, but his heart wasn't in it. His stepson, Douglas Fairbanks Jr. was in New York on leave, and Whiting was to have been godfather that day at the Fairbanks baby's christening.

For eight years we've been hearing "Time . . . marches on!" but not seeing the speaker. In the March of Time's latest film, "Invasion," he'll appear on the screen in person; he's Westbrook Van Voorhis.

Ginny Simms has stepped into the lead in the Metro musical, "Along Broadway," and Eleanor Powell, who had been mentioned for the role, steps out; she asked for a release from her contract, which had nine months more to run. According to the dancer, she wants to devote more time to army camp entertainment, which is wonderful news for the boys who'll benefit.

After signing Anita Louise to a long term contract, Columbia has given her a leading role in "Restless Lady," which will be a comedy thriller rather like "A Night to Remember." Evelyn Keyes, Edmund Lowe, Allyn Joslyn and John Hubbard head the cast.

Arturo Toscanini's two July United States treasury department concerts—the 18th and the 25th—will be attended by army, navy, marine and coast guard enlisted men and officers. The men of the Maritime service will be guests at the September one.

Robert Sterling, on furlough, visited the "Cry 'Havoc'" set to see his bride, Ann Sothern; the scene was a base hospital on Bataan, with 200 extras in army uniforms, and an assistant director tried to herd Bob in with 'em, not recognizing him.

When Rody McDowall met Irene Dunne for the first time, on the "White Cliffs of Dover" set, he brought her messages from civic leaders of ten cities; he'd just returned from a bond-selling tour that took him through 17 states, covering some of the territory that she took in on a similar tour last year.

ODDS AND ENDS—Groucho Marx is being egged on by Chico and Harpo to join them in another film comedy; he says if he does it will be his third farewell screen appearance . . . Charles Bickford, who supports Cary Grant in "Mr. Lucky," sells the government all the hogs he can raise on his 120-acre farm in Massachusetts . . . Dick Powell will play opposite Lucille Ball in "Meet the People" . . . Mary Livingstone was recently voted "Sweetheart of a Flying Skull Squadron" by American Air Force men in North Africa . . . Opinion in the trade is that Jack Carson's new CBS series breaks all the established rules of comedy shows.

CROSS TOWN By Roland Coe

"Wouldn't you like to contribute something for our canteen—ten pounds of jelly beans, perhaps?"

SAMMY JAY SPOILS THE PLAN OF REDDY FOX

REDDY FOX found Sammy Jay in a bad temper. Sammy had missed his usual breakfast of corn stolen from Farmer Brown's corncrib and it had made him cross.

"Good morning," said Reddy in his politest manner—and no one can be more polite than Reddy Fox when he sets out to be.

"Morning," mumbied Sammy Jay.

"I found out something this morning which may interest you," said Reddy; taking no notice of Sammy's cross looks.

"It won't," replied Sammy positively. "It won't. Nothing interests me."

"Not even traps?" asked Reddy slyly.

"What's that?" demanded Sammy, looking at Reddy sharply.

"Oh, nothing much," replied Reddy, quite as if the matter didn't interest him especially, "only I found out something this morning that I thought you might like to see if you were not such a coward."

"Who says I'm a coward?" shrieked Sammy Jay, dancing about with anger.

"I do," replied Reddy. "You don't dare go with me tomorrow morning and see what is going on at Farmer Brown's cornerib."

"It isn't true!" Sammy shrieked. "I dare go wherever you dare go, so there, Reddy Fox!"

"Then I dare you to meet me tomorrow morning on the edge of the Green Forest at sunup and go with me to watch Farmer Brown's corncrib," Reddy replied.

"I'll be there! I'll have you to understand that you don't dare do anything that I don't dare do!" snapped Sammy.

"Who says I'm a coward?" shrieked Sammy Jay.

"All right, see that you are on hand at sunup sharp," replied Reddy, and trotted away grinning.

Early the next morning Reddy Fox and Sammy Jay met at the edge of the Green Forest. "Now," Reddy explained, "we will go over by the fence back of the corncrib. I will hide there just where I hid yesterday morning, and you will hide in the evergreen tree close by. Watch the roof of the corncrib and I think you will see something that may explain how you happened to be caught by the bill the other morning. But, whatever you see, don't make a sound, not the least bit of a sound."

Sammy promised, and they hurried over to their hiding places. Hardly had Sammy settled himself in the evergreen tree when he saw Chatterer the Red Squirrel jump to the roof of the corncrib from the limb of a tree which overhung it. Almost in a flash Chatterer had disappeared through a hole just under the edge of the roof. No sooner was he out of sight than Reddy Fox ran swiftly across to the old stone wall on the edge of the Old Orchard and hid behind it. Right away Sammy Jay guessed that Chatterer had had something to do with the terrible fright he had had at the corncrib.

"It wasn't a trap at all, but Chatterer!" thought Sammy, and right away he grew so angry that he could hardly sit still. Pretty soon out came Chatterer with his cheeks stuffed full of corn. That was too much for Sammy Jay. He forgot all about his promise not to make a sound. He darted out of his hiding place and flew at Chatterer in a terrible rage, screaming at the top of his voice and calling Chatterer every bad thing he could think of. Of course, Chatterer couldn't reply, because his cheeks were stuffed with corn, but he could run. Like a little red flash he was in the tree that overhung the corncrib and dodging around the trunk.

Over behind the stone wall Reddy Fox snarled, for with such a noise he knew it wasn't safe for him to stay a minute longer.

'Grounded' Ducks

Wild ducks are temporarily "grounded" in late summer of each year, usually in August. At this turn of the season the young have not yet learned to use their wings and, in molting, the mature birds have lost their propelling wing feathers.

Some years millions of ducks die during this period when nesting grounds suffer drouth and birds are stranded away from water. Beavers often come to the rescue . . . save thousands of ducks by damming up outlets to lakes or streams.

Learn From Gestures

Deaf-mutes are now employed as instructors in an airplane factory in California because new workers have been found to learn their job more quickly from gestures than from spoken words.

Fowl Bullets

Electrocuted fowl are fired at high speeds into glass panels in order to test the newly developed "bird-proof" airplane windshields.

What To Write Soldiers

"The soldier wants the intimate details of life back home," says Chaplain (Major) Alvie L. McKnight of Cleveland, Mississippi, who has just returned to the U. S. after five months of duty on Guadalcanal. "That the girl who, doors down, has taken a war plant job, or that the couple across the street have had a baby may make your letter read like a personal column in a small-town weekly newspaper. But that's what he wants. By all means, don't tell the soldier about your troubles. He has enough of his own. Domestic troubles affect the moral of the soldier at the front more than anything else. Something to live for and go back to is what keeps a soldier going. It is what gives a man fight. Home life is everything to the man at the front."

Farmers To Get Tools

More than 50 hard-to-get items needed on farms will be provided by a WPB order to manufacturers and wholesalers to set aside specific quantities. This action puts into effect an emergency program worked out under WPB's Office of Civilian Requirements to make available at retail outlets serving farmers, supplies needed to increase food production. The list includes such items as auger bits, batteries, chains, chisels, drills, grain scopps, grease guns, harness, hose, fractional horsepower motors, pails and tubs, pipe fittings, pliers, screw drivers, shovels, tire pumps, valves, and wrenches.

Average Income Up, But . . .

In July, 1940, the average American had an income of about $47.92. Military expenditures in that month amounted to approximately $1.50 per person. In April of this year, income per capita was 1.8 times what it was in the middle of 1940—$85.03, but if the average American had been asked to pay April's war expenses on the spot, they would have taken $53.52 of his new $85.03 income.

$1.00 Apiece For Poor Tires

One dollar apiece is the maximum price that OPA has set for low-quality used passenger car tires which now are permitted for the first time. Maximum additions to this price are provided when tires are given emergency repairs before being sold.

Jap Prisoners Die

More than 300 U. S. war casulties are the result of unhealthful conditions in Japanese prison camps, according to messages received through the international Red Cross from Japan. Disease is stated in each case as the cause of death. Malaria, diphtheria, dysentery, and pneumonia are the major causes and some cases of beri-beri are reported.

Avoid Fuel Shortages

Fuel shortages can be avoided, says a recent OWI report, only if —(1) large consumers of fuel oil, those using more than 10,000 gallons a year, convert their oil burners to coal burners now., (2) both home and industrial users of bituminous coal order supplies now., (3) householders place orders for insulation, weather stripping, storm windows, etc., immediately.

Soldiers Dependents Get Checks

Family allowances and voluntary allotments-of-pay are now in force for about four and a half million soldiers who have more than seven and one-half million dependents, the War Department has announced. More than 20 million family allowance and allotment-of-pay checks have been mailed to the wives, children and other dependents and relatives of army men in one year.

100,000 Dehydrators

A plan for making 100,000 domestic food dehydrators before September 1 has been approved by WPB. These dehydrators are urgently needed, says the War Food Administration, in time to preserve farm and victory garden gruits and vegetables. A home food dehydrator removes moisture from raw food, thereby preserving its flavor and food value for later use.

Alfalfa Hay Under Control

Alfalfa hay was brought under price control by OPA recently in Arizona, Nevada, Utah, Idaho, and New Mexico and in El Paso and Hudspeth counties in Texas at the levels established last February for California, Oregon, and Washington. This is intended to reduce the price to the farmer in the areas now brought under control for the first time. With few exceptions the maximum price is $20 a ton, loose on the fam, ready to load.

Baby Carriage Quota Decreased

Baby carriages to be made in the current quarter have been decreased to 289,369, compared to the original schedule of 317,777. However, strollers, walkers, and sulkies have been increased from 163,500 to 233,500. The demand for baby carriages in 1943 is expected to be 900,000.

Prosecute Gas Ration Violators

Criminal prosecutions for violation of gasoline rationing regulations instituted by OPA through April 30, 1943 totaled 509. Ninety-three cases involved operators of gasoline stations. The remaining 416 were actions against individuals ranging from private automobile owners and filling station attendants to criminal "rings" engaged in systematic theft and sale of stolen gasoline ration books and coupons.

Loans Insured By FHA

More than $6,800,000,000 in loans by private lending institutions financing the construction, purchase, or repair of approximately 5,400,000 homes, have been insured by the Federal Housing Administration since its establishment on June 27, 1943, it was announced as the FHA marked its ninth anniversary. About one-half of the loans have been insured since the start of the war production program in the summer of 1940.

Living Costs Rise

A rise of 1.7 percent in food prices increased the total cost of living for non-rural workers by 0.8 percent in the month ended May 15, nevertheless, the cost of items making up nearly 60 percent of the family budget remained practically unchanged. This increase of 0.8 percent compares with a rise of 1.5 percent in the month ending March 15 and 1.1 percent in the month ending April 15.

Cigarette Brands To Stay

Any rumors that OPA plans to reduce or elimate cigarette brands or brand names, or to provide for only one cigarette, "are absolutely baseless," Price Administrator Prentiss M. Brown declared recently.

She is Just Away

I cannont say, and I will not say
That she is dead, she is just away!
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
She has wandered into an unknown land.

And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be since she lingers there,
And you-oh you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return.

Think of her faring on as dear
In the love of There, as the love of Here,
Think of her still as the same, I say,
She is not dead-she is just away.

POPULAR WALTON LADY JOINS WAC

Miss Masli Falls

Miss Masli Falls, Walton, Ky., was one of the first recruits to be enlisted by the Newport Recruiting Office of WAC.

Miss Falls is a graduate of State Teachers College, Harrisonburg, Va., a sister of James E. Falls, and Manager of the Snax Shop. She has been substitute teacher in the Walton and Park Hills Schools.

She expects to leave to take up her training in the next week or two.

Fall and Winter Beets and Carrots.

Beets and carrots for fall use or storing for winter should be sown in late June. However sowings as late as August 1st sometimes succeed in a favorable season, says the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics. These crops may occupy the space that was used for early greens, peas, cabbage, etc. When early crops are removed, the soil should be spaded or pulverized and worked down to make a fine soil for seeding. Sow beet seed rather thin, about one to the inch and cover about one inch deep. One ounce of seed will sow 50 feet of row. When the plants have developed 4 leaves thin to 4 inches apart. Suggested varieties are Ceasley's Egyptian, Detroit Dark - Red and Winter Keeper.

Special attention is needed to start carrots in hot weather. The seed is small and germinates slowly. To hasten germination the seed may be soaked in water over night, then sown in a furrow about a half-inch deep and covered with moist soil pressed firmly over the seed. A board laid over the row will help to hold moisture till the seedlings appear, when the board should be removed promptly. This procedure is practical only for the home garden.

SWEET CORN

If space is available, the Victory Gardener should try sweet corn, because it is superior in quality to field varieties and serves an important place in the winter diet, either canned or dried.

Plantings may be made till July 15. The variety recommended is Golden Cross Bantam. Usually the well known Golden Bantam should be avoided because it is subject to disease.

The seed may be planted in a continuous row, spacing the plants 15 inches apart in rows 3 feet apart. The average yield for a 100 foot row is 48 ears.

Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Talley and son Jimmie were guests of Mrs. Sallie Miller and Miss Emma Jane Miller Tuesday evening for dinner, the occasion being the third birthday for Jimmie Talley. Rev. Camp Earnest near Burlington. Mrs. Talley and Jimmie are visiting the Millers.

Mrs. Minnie Davis, who has been visiting her son, W. R. Davis of Florence returned to Walton Monday evening to be with her daughter, Mrs. C. J. Alford and Rev. Alford.

Tech. Cpl. Harley Littrell of the 12th Armored Division of Camp Campbell, Ky. was home on a short leave Sunday to visit his mother, Mrs. Conner Littrell who has been quite ill for several days, but is much improved at this writing. Cpl. Harley regretted very much that he did not have more time to see more of his friends and relatives, however he is well satisfied with army life and is quite anxious to go over seas.

How To Be Happy —Though Rationed.

Giving pointers on "how to be happy though rationed," Dr. Henry C. Sherman of the United States Department of Agriculture says, "Let us increase local production and consumption of those protective foods which are too perishable for shipment, such as fruits, vegetables, and milk, with or without eggs." Dr. Sherman, who is chief of the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, adds, "We can not know at present whether in future larger amounts of these relatively local and perishable foods will be wanted for drying and shipment; but we do know definitely that until they are wanted, it is good nutritional science and good citizenship for us to use them freely in place of the sugar, fat and meat that we are sending overseas."

Lawrence O. Kendall, operator for the L. & N. Railroad at Walton was transfered to Campbellsburg, Ky. where he will hold the same position. Campbellsburg is the home of Mrs. Kendall's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Neal. They are moving this week.

Farm Women Enlist In WLA

The Woman's Land Army may henceforth include farm women according to information received by Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent. Farm women are making an important contribution in food production and merit the special recognition which membership in the WLA will give them.

The modifications in the WLA elegibility requirements applying to farm women are as follows:

(1) They should expect to do at least the minimum requirement of one month's agriculture work—this might be one-fourth of the time for four months, one sixth of the time for six months, and so on. The time covered is from May 1st when the legislation was enacted, to December 30, which includes most of this crop year.

(2) Physical examinations are not required.

(3) Special training would not be required.

Farm women applying for membership in the WLA would register with the County Extension office, be certified as members, and be eligible to wear the uniform and to apply for accident assurance.

The WLA uniform includes a pair of dark blue denim overalls, a light-blue long sleeved cotton shirt and a cap with a visor combining both the light and dark blue materials. These are bought by the women themselves at $6.20 for the three pieces, postpaid. If bought seperately, the cap is $1.00 long-sleeved shirt $1.65, and the blue overalls $3.55. The uniform is available in sizes 14 to 44. A dark-blue denim jacket at $2.50 is optional. There is also a short-sleeved cotton shirt available at $1.35.

The material is lighter in weight than that used in the men's work clothes, preshrunk and fast color. The design is suited to a woman's figure and to a woman's uses.

The WLA insignia is attached to the hat and overalls of the uniform. This insignia has 'WLA' in red letters on a white background with the U. S. Crop Corp emblem in the lower part. After serving a year, a WLA member will be eligible for the insignia which denotes a year's service.

Authorized members of the W. L. A. may order the uniforms from the National Committe on Boys and Girls Club Work, 59 East Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill. The orders must bear the signature of the Home Demonstration Agent to signify that the person is an authorized member of the WLA. Order blanks for the uniform and certification forms may be obtained from the Extension Office. A supply of the uniforms will be available for purchase on or before July 15.

It is not required that a member of the WLA wear a uniform, but it is believed that a woman who helps produce the nation's food, feed and fiber will get a thrill out of this recognition of her contribution and she certainly will be provided with an unusually attractive, comfortable and practical work outfit.

Wool Pool Dates Set For Delivery Of Clip July 12th, 13th & 14th

The Boone County Wool Pool members will deliver their clip on next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 12th, 13th and 14th according to H. E. White, president of the Pool. The clip will be delivered at Walton on Monday, Burlington on Tuesday and Petersburg on Wednesday.

Stanley Steinharter of the Buckeye Wool Pooling Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, are the purchasers of the pooled wool. He requests that all wool be delivered before noon on the dates above.

The pool will handle the clip on the same basis as in previous years. The wool will be weighed and paid for at the delivery point. The sale price will not be announced until delivery date. All growers are urged to deliver their wool in a dry, merchantable condition as this adds to the satisfaction of both buyer and seller.

The Boone County Wool Crop this year is expected to net growers in excess of $35,000.00

WITH THE REDS

Cincinnati:—A double-barreled attraction is on tap for fans who witness the return of the Cincinnati Reds to Crosley Field for a night game July 15. Not only will the Reds tangle under the mazdas with the snarling Chicago Cubs, but a gala field meet will take place before the game.

Five events are scheduled, including a 75-yard dash, fungo hitting, accuracy throw by catchers, relay from the outfield, and a wheelbarrow race from the pitcher's mound to home plate in which the participants are blindfolded.

Cincinnati fans will have their first chance to see Dain Clay, speedy Redleg flychaser, in the 75-yard dash. In the recent sprint held before a game at Brooklyn Clay easily won the event, and now he is anxious to test his mercurial feet against the best the Cubs can offer.

The relay throw calls for four men, an outfielder, two infielders, and a catcher. The Red team of Clay, Miller, Mesner, and Mueller also won this event at the Brooklyn meet.

Still another winner was Bucky Walters, whose specialty is fungo hitting, and he will also be entered.

The winner of each event will be presented with a $25 war bond.

Field meets have been intimately associated with baseball in Cincinnati throughout the years. It was at Crosley Field that Evar Ewanson set his base-circling world's record time of 13.3, and it was there that Sheldon LeJeune set a record for throwing a baseball for distance.

The Walton Manufacturing Co. opened last Thursday in North Walton. Much interest and cooperation was shown by the community, which was very pleasing to the company.

Crop Notes From The County Agents Office

Early field tomatoes from several Boone County Growers are now going to market. The best quality fruit has brought $5.50 per half bushel.

The County boasts of several of the best field tomato growers to be found anywhere. Alfred and Louis Dolwick operating as Dolwick Brothers and John P. Dolwick and son both of Constance were irrigating their tomato fields the past week by pumping water from the river and a large lake. This is an intensive type of truck crop raising that is of general interest to all.

Frank McGlasson and Sons of Constance, R. 1 on last Saturday displayed one of the cleanest and best crops of apples and peaches to be found anywhere, anytime. These experienced orchardmen, have done an excellent job of spraying and good fruit management.

Wheat harvest started in the county this week. Many growers are finding their prospective yields not heavy enough to harvest with machinery but are going to hog down their crop. Hogging down of wheat has been estimated by Ben Berkshire of Petersburg and several of our older farmers as worth an additional ten dollars per acre in improved fertility. All grain and straw possible should be saved this year.

Hugh Stephens of East Bend bottoms harvested fifty bushel of Balbo rye seed the past week from three acres. He states Balbo rye is the best winter pasture crop he has ever grown. Eighteen hogs grazed the above field all winter and up until two weeks before the seed crop was harvested. He is asking $2.00 per bushel for the seed rye.

T. J. Carr Esp. of Verona reports his section has not had a good rain for several weeks but to date crops are not damaging. Rains in recent weeks over the County have been spotted. If rains come in several sections within the next few days there will still be tobacco set and some resetting.

Hay harvest is upon us. Lets do our best to save every fork full of hay. We must be neighborly, cooperate in use of machinery and equipment and exchange labor.

Stomach worms are showing up in several sheep flocks. Drenching and change of pasture gives results.

Coccidiosis has affected more young chickens than ever before. Effective control is secured where recommendations are carried out.

Christian and Methodist Churches to Hold Bible School.

The Christian and Methodist Churches are sponsoring a Children's Vacation Bible School at the Methodist church this week. The first session was held Monday morning from 9 to 11:30 with a good interest and enrollment.

This is a one week school and the faculty was impressed with the eagerness of the pupils enrolled, and are expecting to have a great time with the children throughout the week closing Sunday evening with a good commencement program.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Senate, House Conference Committee Stops Roll-Back of Retail Food Costs; Revised Bill Approves Funds for FSA; Heavy Aerial Action Marks Pacific War

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

To test new rubber life rafts and accessories, six men were cast adrift off Cape Fear, N. C., in the Atlantic. The men were equipped with a new lightweight life preserver which also holds rations and other essentials, solution for purifying salt water for drinking and oars out of which a mast and boom can be erected by linking them together in a right angle.

PRICE 'ROLL-BACK':
Doomed by Committee

Drastic revision of the administration's subsidy program was indicated by action of a senate and house conference committee, which prohibited use of funds for the "roll-back" of retail food prices. The committee's move would kill the present "roll-back" of butter and meat, only permitting payments to processors for commitments to June 15.

However, the committee did authorize the payment of 150 million dollars in subsidies to offset increased transportation costs, and stimulate the production of scarce metals and essential food products. Congressional approval, however, would be required for expenditures over 150 million dollars.

The conference committee's action ignored an appeal by the War Labor board for the adoption of the administration's "roll-back" program. Citing its policy of limiting wage increases to 15 per cent over the January 1941 level, the WLB declared that the cost of living has spiralled up 6 per cent since last October, with food alone rising 12.9 per cent.

The conference committee increased the Commodity Credit corporation lending authority 750 million dollars to an aggregate of 3 billion 400 million dollars. Under the terms of the bill which also extended the life of the CCC for two years, the war food administrator would be allowed to buy food from farmers and resell it at a loss to stimulate production.

CHEERS ALLIES:
Major Blow

Invasion talk quickened with the statement of Malcolm MacDonald, British high commissioner to Canada, that the Allies would soon assault Hitler's European fortress.

In predicting the invasion, MacDonald said a series of small forays could be expected to feel out the enemy before a major blow would be struck.

MacDonald saw further cheer in the Allies' operations against U-boats in the North Atlantic. Even as he revealed that one submarine had been sunk each day during the preceding two weeks, Goering's Essener National Zeitung confessed that the Allies had surprised the Nazi U-boat force by the use of aircraft carriers in convoys.

As invasion talk increased, Allied bombers continued to pound Germany.

TREASON:
New Trials in Chicago

Basing part of its decision on a recent Supreme court ruling, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals voided the conviction of six defendants for treason in Chicago and ordered the case reheard.

It was pointed out that the Supreme court had held arraignment before a magistrate necessary before a suspect could be questioned. In the treason case, statements had been taken before such arraignment, although the government claimed the suspects had waived the right of appearance before a judicial officer.

The appeals court also held that the individuals were entitled to separate trials which the court denied, and Judge William J. Campbell had erroneously instructed the jury.

FARM:
Approve FSA Funds

Final congressional action on the 875 million dollar farm bill was further delayed with the senate's return of the bill to a conference committee for adoption of provisions for crop insurance and incentive payments.

Before returning the bill, the senate approved conference recommendations for the farm security program. Twenty million dollars was appropriated for the administration of the agency and it was authorized to borrow 60 millions for rehabilitation loans. Transfer of the FSA functions to the War Food administration also was approved.

In sending the bill back to the committee, the senate insisted on acceptance of its provisions for continuing wheat and crop insurance, and on removal of restrictions against use of 400 million dollars of soil conservation payments for incentive awards to producers.

The conference version had recommended an appropriation of 30 million dollars for loans to tenants for farm purchase. It also permitted the FSA to use as much of its funds as necessary during the first four months of the fiscal year before passage of legislation in congress over the future of the FSA. The senate approved both sections.

CABINET RIFT:
Wallace vs. Jones

Differences in the presidential cabinet flared into the open when Vice President Henry A. Wallace accused Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones of hamstringing operations of the Board of Economic Warfare.

As chairman of the BEW, Wallace directs the agency's program for the purchase of material and development of strategic natural resources in foreign countries. As chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation, Jones is responsible for furnishing the funds for the BEW operations.

Wallace claimed that the RFC was lax in building up a stockpile of strategic material before Pearl Harbor, although expressly authorized to do so. Jones countered with the assertion that of 1½ billion dollars of precious material bought by this country, the BEW initiated only 5 per cent of the purchases.

PACIFIC:
Action in Air

While American aviators bombed Kiska seven times in one day in the North Pacific, the deliverance of heavy blows at Japan in the Southwest Pacific was promised by Maj. Gen. Claire Chennault upon his return to China from conferences at Washington.

As the soupy Aleutian weather cleared enough to warrant operations, medium bombers hammered at Kiska, blowing up anti-aircraft emplacements and runways. The raids brought to 16 the number staged by American airmen in three days.

In predicting an offensive against the Japs in the southwest, General Chennault said conferences in Washington had convinced him that the U. S. was concentrating most of its naval action in the Pacific and that Allied leaders were making a most judicious use of resources for global warfare.

CHESTER DAVIS:
Resigns Food Job

As support grew in congress for his appointment as Food Czar, Chester Davis resigned from his position as War Food administrator. Lack of sufficient authority and opposition to the government's subsidy program were the reasons Davis gave for his action.

President Roosevelt accepted the resignation and immediately named Marvin Jones, a former Texas congressman and chairman of the United Nations' recent food conference, as his successor. Mr. Roosevelt also relieved Davis of responsibility for plotting the 1944 food program, saying it would not be proper to tie another administrator to somebody else's policies.

In his letter of resignation, Davis declared that subsidies would not tend to halt inflation in this country unless accompanied by current tax and savings programs. Mr. Roosevelt replied with the statement that congress had failed to enact the added tax legislation he had asked.

In answer to Davis' assertion that authority over broad food policy and the day-to-day decisions were being exercised elsewhere, Mr. Roosevelt said he had named a War Mobilization director for the purpose of co-ordinating all functions of the war agencies.

MEDITERRANEAN:
Blast Axis From Air

While the Axis continued to report Allied concentrations in North Africa, U. S. airmen struck at Nazi aerial installations in Greece, further diverting attention to the Balkans.

Strong formations of Liberator bombers raided Axis airdromes near the ancient Greek capital of Athens. Although enemy planes arose in number to the defense, hits were reported on hangars, fuel dumps and aircraft spread over the fields.

In announcing the raids, the ninth U. S. air force also revealed that the Axis continued their novel attacks on our planes by attempting to drop bombs on them from fighters overhead.

British Wellington bombers dropped incendiaries and block busters on Naples as direct attacks were continued on Italy. Docks and industrial installations were reported struck and the Italians admitted damage.

COAL PRODUCTION:
U. S. Names Director

While 156,000 miners stayed out of the pits, Carl Elbridge Newton, 45-year-old president of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, was appointed to direct the operations of the nation's mines now under government control. The selection of Newton was announced as Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes told a congressional committee that there was no hope for an early return of the properties to the owners.

Although many locals voted to resume work, thousands of soft and hard coal miners insisted they would not go back without a new contract. Pits of several steel companies in Pennsylvania were affected, but in Illinois where the union and operators had come to an agreement before the War Labor board refused to recognize the concession, all of the 25,000 miners were on the job.

Formerly an assistant United States attorney in New York and special assistant state attorney general in New York, Newton was named president of the Chesapeake and Ohio last December 15. However, he had been connected with railroad matters since 1938. In his capacity, Newton is answerable only to Ickes, although he will have the services in Ickes' office.

U. S. BACKS GIRAUD:
F.D.R. Shows Support

President Roosevelt's approval of General Eisenhower's support of Gen. Henri Giraud's French command in North Africa was seen in an invitation extended to Giraud to visit the U. S. Although Giraud accepted, he is not expected to make the trip until cessation of hostilities.

General Eisenhower came to Giraud's side during the recent conferences of the French National committee at Algiers. Gen. Charles DeGaulle had boldly sought to subordinate Giraud to a military commission and replace certain of his officers. General Eisenhower then stepped in and insisted on the retention of Giraud's command.

Back of the maze of political complication, one could see General Eisenhower's firm respect for the honor so strongly cast in military men. It was General Eisenhower who negotiated with Admiral Jean Darlan for French North Africa's collaboration with the Allies at the time of the U. S. landings in 1942. When Darlan was assassinated, General Giraud inherited his position as high commissioner and with it, Darlan's organization.

NAZI SPY:

Trial for espionage with death or prison facing him if convicted loomed before 57-year-old Ernest Lehmitz, Staten Island, N. Y., air raid warden, following his confession to the FBI that he had informed the German government of American troop movements, convoys and arms production.

Lehmitz had communicated with the Nazi intelligence by using invisible ink to write between the lines of apparently harmless letters to acquaintances in Germany.

MORE PLANES TO CHINA

It can now be revealed that the bottleneck has been broken in transportation to China, and greater quantities of equipment for air operations against the Japanese are being moved.

This is an encouraging development following the successful Chinese operations against the Japs in the Ichang area within recent weeks. Incidentally, these operations have been somewhat exaggerated by the Chinese. It now appears that the Japs did not intend to move against Chungking, nor did they have quite the number of men earlier reported.

The outstanding point, however, is that the Chinese were successful largely as a result of air power. This was a tribute not only to Chennault and the American pilots, but also to a contingent of Chinese pilots flying with the Chennault group.

Until recently it was not desirable to increase the number of planes in China, because the limited supply facilities by air from India constituted a bottleneck. There was no need of having more planes if they could not be supplied with fuel and bombs for operation. Now, however, a greater number of transport planes has been provided for this service and it has become feasible to increase the number of combat planes at the end of the line in China.

PLANES TO RUSSIA

About a year ago, Russian Red army men in Washington almost got down on their knees begging for airplanes. U. S. planes were much scarcer then than today. Production was low and there were also heavy demands from Egypt and MacArthur.

At one time, the Russians actually suggested that the best way to parcel out lend-lease equipment would be to adopt a very simple standard, namely, which army was killing the most Germans.

Gradually, however, planes were sent to Russia, until today they are going in tremendous quantities. This is one reason why the Nazis have lacked heavy superiority in the air, which previously they had.

In fact, the Russians now have shifted their pleas away from airplanes and concentrated them on food. With the breadbasket of Russia in German hands, large sections of the population are starving.

ARMY DOCTORS STYMIED

Next time the army tries to recruit doctors in peacetime, a lot of medicos who patriotically became reserve officers long before Pearl Harbor are going to think twice before they do so again.

Reason is that the doctors who became reserve officers well in advance of war have now been penalized. They are stymied on promotions. Meanwhile, doctors who have come into the army recently have shot way ahead of them in rank.

What happened was that after a lot of reserve corps doctors had been brought into the army, still more doctors were needed. So the medical corps upped its bids. It offered higher commissions as majors and lieutenant colonels.

Meanwhile, when lower ranking former reserve officers raise the question of promotions, the stock reply is: "The tables of organization do not permit it."

Germany's 'Maginot Mind' May Hasten Nazi Collapse

Axis Propagandists Fear Fortress Europa Concept May Backfire; If Allies Break 'Impregnable' Line Morale May Crack.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Has Herr Goebbels created a "maginot mind" in his minions which will crumble and wreck German morale just as the failure of the French defense smashed French morale? That is a question which the students of propaganda in Washington are studying with great interest today.

Both external evidence—newspapers, broadcasts, public statements; and internal evidence—reports of spies and neutral observers; reveal two things: one, that the Axis peoples are extremely invasion-conscious; and two, that they are suffering from a severe case of war nerves. But a third more serious possibility is developing.

As a result of the "maginot mind," it is believed that a marked increase in the scope of the air raids, or even a minor success of a single invasion unit, might result in a complete breakdown of Axis morale. Realizing this, the German propaganda forces are working frantically to change their previous verbal barrages based on the concept of the Fortress Europa, an utterly impregnable defense system, back to the original German concept of the value and efficiency of a highly mobile, offensive force.

Last year, when the second front talk reached its height, the German defense propaganda reached a high water mark too. Then when invasion weather passed, the German defense talk died down to be renewed this past April. Everything was done by the Nazis to create the idea that Europe was ringed by an unbreachable wall of steel, iron and concrete. Comparisons were made with the Maginot line; they said the guns in the Maginot line could traverse 180 degrees—in the new German wall, they can swing around the whole 360 degrees. They said that the steel used in the construction equals a bar which would reach from the earth to the moon—the concrete would build a road from Berlin to the Solomon islands.

Those Six Months

That was the kind of fare the Germans and the Italians were served. Immediately after the fall of Tunisia, for instance, there was an Axis chorus which tried to sound exceedingly jubilant when it declared: "Hallelujs, we have held back the enemy successfully for six months, long enough to complete our fortifications, it is too late for an attack on our fortress now."

In recent weeks, however, with the growing attacks on German cities, the surrender of the Italian island fortress to forces utterly indifferent to walls of steel or concrete, the German propagandists have begun to realize that they went too far in building a faith in a wall—that their propaganda is in danger of back-firing. They realize that if that concept is held, and if the Allies make a landing at any point and break the wall, the civilian morale will break with it.

So the tune has suddenly changed. Now we hear that the shores of the Mediterranean are protected by a splendid mobile defense—there is no south wall to Europe—none is needed. The European continent under German dominance is ideally equipped, far better equipped for offense against any invader who might get a foothold than the invader could possibly be; the difficulty of the Allied transportation across water is stressed, the power of the submarine is emphasized.

But this about-face, according to observers here, has come pretty late and can hardly create much confidence on the part of a nation which has had the myth of the Fortress Europa pounded into it for over a year.

About the Luftwaffe

There is another factor, of course, which is working against enemy morale; that is, the fact that the hardest blows now struck come from the air with the weapon which Italy exalted and which Hitler forged and put into effect in the form of his one-time invinoible Luftwaffe.

Meanwhile, what has happened to the Luftwaffe—which some people have called the "vanished" Luftwaffe?

We have heard much about it during past months, but very little has been of a definite nature.

Well, the paper strength of Germany's air force has been pretty well plotted from data obtained in confidential reports to Allied headquarters here and abroad. This is what it looks like:

A maximum overall, first-line German force of between four and five thousand planes. (Even as I write, it is probably declining in numbers.) The whole is divided into five "Luftflotte" (airfleets) one of which, until the middle of June, was putting up a considerable offensive effort on the northern Russian front. It is (or was) under General Keller and it may originally have been composed of 2,500 planes. That estimate is questioned by some American observers.

The second fleet under General Pesslering was in the Mediterranean area. It was estimated shortly after Tunisia as 800 strong but probably soon thereafter was considerably "wasted" and not very efficient because it was spread thinly over a long coast line with Italy as a weak link.

The Remainder

The third fleet was under General Sperle—perhaps fifteen hundred planes with the tremendous and growing task of guarding the German industrial area, the submarine ports all the way to the bay of Biscay—and also the duty of meeting an invasion at any point along that long coast line.

Then there was General Richthofen's fleet in southern Russia and General Stumpf's at the other end of the stick in Norway with what was left.

Besides these fleets, or a part of them perhaps, were certain "Flieger korps"—mobile units which attempted to come to the rescue when some area was in dire distress. But the whole force, the experts believe, is spread so thin that in case of simultaneous air attack, great gaps have to be left which would make (and already have made) Allied air invasion safe and, as a corollary, would do the same for land invasion beneath it.

The Luftwaffe has not vanished. It is still a powerful weapon and the Germans are trying to maintain its strength by concentrating on the production of fighter planes. But the days when Hitler's evil angels darkened the skies and fortunes of Europe are over.

Diary of a Broadcaster

This "share-a-taxi" system is really working out very well, but it requires quick thinking. I heard a very charming but disappointed young lady telling her tale of woe today.

"I had to get to my dentist this noon and I stopped a cab with someone in it. The driver said he had to go to the Mayflower hotel first. That was only a few blocks out of the way but I was in a hurry so I said 'no.' As the cab started off, I looked at the passenger. And was I sorry I said 'no'—it was Wendell Willkie!"

Oh, we are learning to do without. In Washington the "without" sometimes seems as if it would include shirts and sheets—clean ones, anyhow. Anyone beams who is able to get his laundry in time in this town.

SPEAKING of SPORTS

by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Despite the many problems besetting all types of athletics, the National Football league looks with confidence to the 1943 season.

Pointing to the success of baseball as a pattern for the diamond game, Elmer Layden, league commissioner, is optimistic about the outlook:

"I think our members feel that now is the time to assert ourselves, to show that pro football is deserving of its high position in the sports world. Baseball surely had as many problems last year, if not more, than now confront us. I am sure the league will prove it can survive under trying conditions.

"We won't have talent comparable to that of last year and we can't think in these times of great unbeatable teams, but there will be no lessening of competition and games will be as hardfought and exciting as ever. Baseball and other sports have proved that competition is the big factor."

Elmer Layden

Commissioner Layden added that club owners always have recognized the value of competitive sports, and that the dollar sign wasn't the only guide in affairs of the National league. "Many of them (the clubs) have lost money in normal seasons. Some of them never have realized any profit, but they still continue."

New Franchises

The league, as of the present time, appears to be in a healthy state. It will operate this season with eight teams, and one more ready to go to work in 1944.

At a recent Chicago meeting, club magnates granted a franchise to Ted Collins, manager of radio star Kate Smith and an enthusiastic football fan. Arrangements are being made to set up an organization in Boston. The new team's games are to be played in Fenway park, home of the Red Sox.

At the same session, petitions were received for two more franchises—one from Don Ameche, film and radio star, and the other from Charles Murray, Buffalo, N. Y., promoter.

Sideline observers were somewhat confused when one franchise was granted and the other two were held up. However, the league decided to table until its December meeting the latter two applications in order that a study might be made of the problem, not the least of which is transportation.

Actually the league as it now stands has 11 franchises. Boston's becomes active in 1944. Cleveland's was made inactive for the duration at an earlier meeting this year and permission was given the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Philadelphia Eagles to merge for the season.

Round-Robin

The fact that only eight teams of the 11 will be operating makes it possible, for the first time in National league history, to play a round-robin tournament. Each team will meet every other team in its division on a home-and-home basis and meet each team in the other division once.

The Chicago Bears, Chicago Cardinals, Green Bay Packers and Detroit Lions compose the Western division, with the New York Giants, Brooklyn Dodgers, Washington Redskins, and the Pittsburgh-Philadelphia club grouped in the East.

A franchise will be nothing new for Boston. It was in the league until 1936 when George Preston Marshall, owner of the Washington Redskins, pulled out of that city in favor of the nation's capital. It was Marshall who made the motion that the league grant Collins a Boston franchise effective in 1944.

The Boston franchise becomes operative just prior to the December draft meeting, which will allow the new club to get in on the college player draft. The league, together with club officials, figured it would be smart policy to delay Boston's entrance for a few months to prevent many of the mistakes which might have resulted from hasty organization.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS

by Lynn Chambers

Tall, cool glasses of Ginger Cooler will help get your daily qnota of milk into your summer diets besides foiling Ol' Sol ou his busiest days.

Cool Salads, Drinks, Sandwiches Help Keep Family Comfortable

You will bless the sandwich, salad and cool drink ideas on those warm days when it is too hot to roast the meat and cook all your vegetables. Set the table in your coolest colors with coolest foods. and don your coolest frock, and you will be giving your family the best—on the home front.

It's doubly important that you keep yourself and your family fit during these times as there are so many activities demanding buoyant health and energy. Even though the food you serve is on the cool side, make every bit of it count as far as its nourishment is concerned.

Cram the salads full of vitamins and minerals, and plan your menus to give your family a well-balanced diet. Foods served during the summer should be even more appetizing than foods served during other seasons, for appetites tend to lag.

If the family does not want to eat a great deal during the meal proper, make the snacks count. For instance, milk drinks will help to get in the pint daily for adults, and the quart for children. You'll enjoy this simple and delicious beverage:

Ginger Cooler.
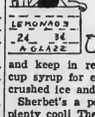
(Makes 1 tall glass)

1 cup milk, chilled
⅛ teaspoon salt.
½ cnp ginger ale
2 to 3 tablespoons vanilla ice cream



Pour into a tall, chilled glass. Add salt and stir in ginger ale. Top with ice cream and serve immediately.

There's something about good, old-fashioned lemonade that still hits the spot during days that the thermometer speeds to the top rung of the temperature ladder:

Grandmother's Lemonade.
(Serves 10 to 12)

2 cups sugar or 2½ cnps honey
2½ cnps water
Juice of 6 lemons
Juice of 2 oranges
Grated rind of 1 orange
1 cup mint leaves

Cook sugar and water 10 minutes. (If using honey, bring water to a boil, then add honey and cook 5 minutes.) Cool. Add fruit juices and rind. Pour over mint leaves. Cover and let stand one hour. Strain into jar and keep in refrigerator. Use ½ cup syrup for each glass; fill with crushed ice and water.

Sherbet's a popular dessert, and plenty cooll The citrus fruit in this makes it even cooler:

Orange Sherbet.
(Makes 1 quart)

1½ cups sugar
1 cnp water
2 egg whites, stiffly beaten
2 cnps orange juice
3 tablespoons lemon juice

Boil sugar and water together for 5 minutes. Beat slowly into egg whites. Add fruit juices. Pour into freezing tray and set cold control at fast freezing. Freeze stiff, then beat or stir thoroughly. Return to freezing compartment and finish freezing. Serve in sherbet glasses, garnishing each with sprig of mint and a half slice of unpeeled orange.

Salads that are full of protein and that keep the cook cool are these that fill the main dish order of summer meals:

Royal Lamb Salad.
(Serves 6)

2 cnps diced, cooked lamb
1 cnp diced celery
1 cnp Bing cherries
4 hard-cooked eggs
½ cup chopped nuts
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup mayonnaise
Salad greens

Combine all ingredients exceptt mayonnaise and chill thoroughly. Just before serving, toss in mayonnaise lightly and serve on a bed of greens. If desired, garnish with additional slices of hard-cooked eggs and cherries.

Veal and Bacon Salad.
(Serves 6)

2½ cnps cold, cooked veal, diced
½ cup crisp bacon, finely cut
½ cup diced celery
¼ cnp radish slices
½ cnp mayonnaise
6 small tomatoes

Mix the veal and the bacon with the celery, radishes and mayonnaise and chill. Place each peeled tomato in a lettuce cup. Cut down several sections to open. Place a mound of the salad mixture into each tomato and top with mayonnaise.

Occasionally a fruit salad is all that is desired for a simple luncheon. In that case, make it as attractive and nourishing as possible:

Summer Fruit Salad.
(Serves 6)

1 medium cantalonpe, peeled and cnt in cubes
2 cnps raspberries or dewberries
2 cnps diced fresh pineapple

Chill and mix lightly together. Serve portions on crisp lettuce or watercress and top with mayonnaise flavored with honey.

A cool dessert for a cool meal—Orange Sherbet. It can be simply made in the cool, morning hours, stored in the refrigerator until ready to serve.

Finger sandwiches go well with the salads to round out the meal and are both cool and delicious:

Ground boiled ham with ground pickles and mayonnaise.

Cottage cheese, chopped stuffed olives, nuts.

Peanut butter, raspberry jam.

Chopped dates, orange juice, chopped nuts.

Mashed cooked shrimp and cream cheese.

Flaked salmon, chopped cucumber and mayonnaise.

Cookies like these will go well with your fresh fruits:

Molasses Raisin Bars.

¼ cup shortening
½ cup sugar
1 egg
½ cup baking molasses
2 cups sifted flour
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon soda
1¼ teaspoons baking powder
½ cup sweet milk
1 cup chopped nuts
1 cup raisins

Cream shortening, add sugar and beat lightly. Add egg, beat well, then add molasses. Sift flour with dry ingredients and add alternately with milk to first mixture. Add chopped nuts and raisins. Spread thinly in greased shallow pan and bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven for 15 to 20 minutes. Cut in bars before cooling.

The TIRE OF TOMORROW is here TODAY!

THE WORLD-FAMOUS FIRESTONE DeLuxe Champion TIRE IS NOW BEING MADE WITH

Firestone Butaprene

THE MARVELOUS New SYNTHETIC RUBBER

JUST as you'd expect, Firestone is FIRST to build the tire of tomorrow for the car owners of America. It is only natural that Firestone should be the leader in working out new processes, in creating new compounds and in building better tires from American-made rubber, for Firestone has always been the pioneer in developing new materials, new methods and new machines that have resulted in tremendous advancements in tire design, construction and performance.

From Firestone have come such revolutionary improvements as the FIRST straight side tire, the FIRST rubber non-skid tread, the FIRST commercial demountable rim, the FIRST patented Gum-Dipping Process, the FIRST balloon tire, the FIRST Safti-Lock Cord Body, the FIRST Super-Speed Construction and the FIRST practical pneumatic tractor tire.

In 1933, Firestone built the FIRST synthetic rubber airplane tires for our armed forces. In 1940, Firestone built its FIRST synthetic rubber passenger car tires at the New York World's Fair and began the manufacture of its own synthetic rubber, called Butaprene, the same type that was later adopted by the Government. In 1942, Firestone became the FIRST company to produce synthetic rubber in a Government-owned plant and later became the FIRST to make synthetic rubber using butadiene made from grain alcohol. And today Firestone is making synthetic rubber tires for passenger cars, trucks, buses, airplanes, tractors, farm implements and all types of war vehicles.

All of these years of experience, all of the knowledge that made these FIRSTS possible have been called upon in producing the new Firestone DeLuxe Champion Tire made with Firestone Butaprene. It is now ready for the car owners of America as released by the Government. But do not think that the crisis is past. America's greatest rubber supply is still on the wheels of its 27,000,000 cars. So you must continue all of the rubber conservation measures that have been so effective. However, if you are eligible and require new tires, remember this — in mileage, in strength and in safety the new Firestone DeLuxe Champion Tire upholds the Firestone tradition of "Best in Rubber — Synthetic or Natural."

PORTRAIT OF A PATRIOT

HE wears overalls...a business suit ...sport clothes. He lives in a cottage on Main Street...a mansion on top of the hill...a farmhouse.

His eyes are blue...gray...brown. His age is 30...40...70...or somewhere in between.

He and his family are buying War Bonds...cultivating a Victory Garden...giving time to Civilian Defense...blood to the Red Cross. They're conserving the rubber in their automobile tires...stretching their gasoline ration to the limit.

And this wartime summer, neither he nor any member of his family will make a single unnecessary trip by train.

They all know that the railroads have their hands full taking care of vital military traffic, members of the armed forces on furlough, civilians traveling on essential war business, and those who have to travel for some necessary reason.

So, they figure — correctly and patriotically — that, by not traveling on a train this summer unless it is absolutely necessary, they can make another real contribution to the war effort; help speed Victory and the return of Peace; strike another blow for freedom.

Portrait of a Patriot!

His name? What's your name?

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. March 11 Lieut. Bulkeley showed the squadron their secret orders. They were to take General MacArthur's party and some additional personnel to the southern islands. When they arrived safely at Cebu, General MacArthur promised Bulkeley he would try to get him and his key men out of the Philippines.

CHAPTER XII

"The skipper was frantic to get some of our little fleet back into commission so we could finish out the fight. We'd started the war with six boats. Two were lost off Bataan. One was lost on the escape trip south. That left only three, and two of these were wrecks, fit only for the dry dock, Bulkeley's being the only craft left in fighting condition. But he was bound to get the others back into shape. Did I think I could get mine to Cebu?

"Well, we could try, and we started off, my poor old boat with her earthquake making twelve knots, her back end wiggling like a ship-wrecked sailor's dream of a French musical-comedy star. Whatever she was good for now, it wasn't fighting, and I was glad we didn't meet any Japs.

"The machine shop was run by 'Dad' Cleland, a seventy-one-year-old American who'd been in the islands since 1914, and a swell gent he was—originally from Minnesota and a typical hulking frontiersman. Didn't look a day over fifty and was a kind of patriarch in those parts. His native name was 'the old man' or 'the headman' in Tagalog.

"He was a great gourmet, too. Had Bulkeley and me out to dinner and we had bottled beer (a great rarity), a big crab-meat cocktail, and then lobster Newburg, which was delicious, but 'Dad' kept warning us to hold back, because then he broke out a couple of roast ducks.

"Dessert was simple, like the last bars of a symphony. Just delicious chilled mangoes and Chase & Sanborn's coffee. It was a magnificent feed after the native chow I'd been eating. We talked about the war. People in Cebu felt the show was about up, unless miraculous help arrived soon.

"'What are you going to do when the Japs come?' we asked 'Dad.' He straightened up—all six feet two of him.

"'Have my dignity to think about,' he said. 'I'm not going to the hills. I'll stay right here and face them.

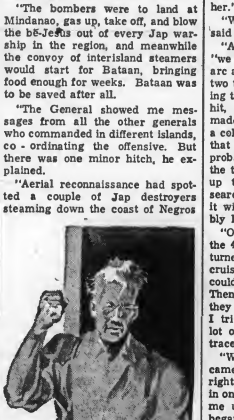
"'Dad' was working for the government for a dollar a year. When he finally finished with our repairs—they took many days—we asked him how much the bill was. 'We'll forget about it,' he said. 'You fight 'em and I'll fix 'em. It's the least I can do.'

"He clenched his big fist, and it was about the size of a nail keg. Since I've come back here I've read about some outfits working on war contracts who were paying their stenographers fifty thousand dollars a year and charging it to the government as expenses until they were caught. It's a waste of time to indict them. Just get old 'Dad' Cleland back here and let him go in and reason with them in their swivel chairs. With those big fists of his, he'd know how to expostulate with racketeers like that.

"Until we got to Cebu we hadn't been paid since the war started. In Cebu the men all got paid and it was quite a spectacle. The dozen on my boat, going from bar to bar, got rid of two thousand dollars in three days. If it had been two million instead, they would have got rid of it just as quick, although it might have strained them some. Then they settled back to their routine means of livelihood, which was playing poker with the army.

"But things were moving in Cebu, and very secretly we began to hear hints of a big American offensive which was coming rolling up from the south through the islands in time to save Bataan, which was almost out of food and ammunition. Word came that two submarines were arriving in Cebu, where they would be loaded with food and returned to Bataan—we brought the first one in through the channel.

"It was a big secret—the area was cleared for two miles around. The loading was done at night and by officers only—we helped until our hands were raw—because they were fearful that some sailor or soldier might drop a hint of it in a native bar where it would get to the Japs. For three solid nights we worked until my back and arms ached, stowing all that stuff in the subs, but all the time I kept thinking of Peggy and the grand old gang up there on the Rock and what was left of the peninsula—fighting on without hope or food. Well, here was a little of both we were sending them. To make more room they stripped the submarines of torpedoes—gave 'em to us, four for the 35 boat if we could ever get her into action, two for the 41 boat, which already had two, and charged them for us with compressed air from the submarine's tanks. Now MTB's were ready for battle, and into the submarine's empty tubes we stuffed food, and I kept thinking, as we shoved it in—there's another square meal for Peggy back there on the Rock.



"But that wasn't half of it. Because in addition to the subs—the last one shoved off on April 5—there were seven fat interisland steamers being secretly loaded with food down near 'Dad' Cleland's dock—medical supplies, quinine the boys were dying without, everything they needed to hold on. But how could they hope to get these fat little tubs up through the islands to Bataan? Bulkeley was to find out three days later."

"The General in command at Cebu called me in and verified the hints we'd heard of the big American offensive," said Bulkeley. "He assured me everything was set. It was to start at dawn the very next morning. That very night, twelve fortresses and heavy bombers were coming up from Australia. A swarm of P-35's were on their way up from Mindanao to Iloilo, where they were to gas up and go into action.

"The bombers were to land at Mindanao, gas up, take off, and blow the b-Jesus out of every Jap warship in the region, and meanwhile the convoy of interisland steamers would start for Bataan, bringing food enough for weeks. Bataan was to be saved after all.

"The General showed me messages from all the other generals who commanded in different islands, co-ordinating the offensive. But there was one minor hitch, he explained.

"Aerial reconnaissance had spotted a couple of Jap destroyers steaming down the coast of Negros

"He clenched his big fist, and it was about the size of a nail keg."

Island. Somewhat to the eastward there was a cruiser which carried four seaplanes, but they weren't worried about it. But that afternoon reports had come in giving the progress of the Jap destroyers. Obviously they were heading toward Cebu. Maybe they had broken down our American codes and knew about the interisland steamers, and were coming in either to blockade them or to shell them at the dock.

"Why couldn't we have a part in this great offensive which tomorrow was to sweep up and blast Jap shipping and warships between Mindanao, Cebu, and Bataan?" Lieutenant Kelly thought, "We could be helpful by going out tonight and knocking off one or both of those Jap destroyers, which by midnight should be approaching the narrow channel between Cebu and Negros Islands. The cruiser—never mind her, American bombers would polish her off in the morning."

"Bulkeley came in at eight o'clock that night and told me about it," said Kelly. "My boat had been in the water just four hours—she was supposed to soak for twenty-four before she should be exposed to any pounding, but I asked him if we couldn't go out with him. 'I was hoping you'd like to,' the skipper told me. 'Think you can make it?' 'I don't know,' I said, 'but we'll soon find out. This'll be as good a dock trial for her as any.'"

"To man the boats I called for volunteers," said Bulkeley. "I had no trouble about that. I guess they understood by now that any man who doesn't volunteer won't be in the squadron long if I can get rid of him."

"They were all tickled to be in on the big offensive," said Kelly. "It was apparently so well prepared that the army had given us the radio frequency of the co-ordinating planes—that big American air umbrella which would be spread over us at dawn—in case we needed to talk with them."

"We got out to the island passage about 11:30 that night and sneaked in close to shore," said Bulkeley. "The moon wasn't due until 2:30. I was riding in the 41 boat, Ensign Cox commanding, while Kelly had his 34 boat. We'd worked out our strategy. If two destroyers showed up, my boat was to tackle the leading one and Kelly the second. If only one arrived, my boat would attack her on the quarter, and Kelly's on the bow.

"At five minutes to twelve Glover, the quartermaster at the wheel, called 'Look—there she is!' A black object was coming round the point. 'Jumping Jesus!' said Glover. 'There she is!'—because it was no little Jap destroyer but a thundering big Kuma class cruiser sliding around that point—so clear we could almost make out her 6-inch guns.

"I gave our boat a hard right rudder, sneaking in toward the shore where the cruiser couldn't see us. Apparently she was alone. Now we curved out, into firing position, on her port beam, making as little noise as we could, and as she passed, five hundred yards away, Cox fired two torpedoes, but they straddled her.'

"'We fired two from our side,' said Kelly, 'but they also missed.'

"After that," said Ensign Cox, "we in the 41 boat made a wide arc and attacked again with our last two torpedoes—Bulkeley himself firing them, and this time two of them hit, right under the bridge. They made no flash, but a good bump and a column of water. But even before that the cruiser had waked up—probably saw the wakes of one of the torpedoes—anyway she speeded up to twenty-five knots and her searchlight came on and she waved it wildly around in the air, probably looking for torpedo planes."

"Our torpedoes were all gone in the 41 boat," said Bulkeley, "but I turned around and ran astern of the cruiser to draw her fire so Kelly could get in for his second attack. Then we saw the destroyers, but they wouldn't give chase, although I tried to create the illusion of a lot of boats by firing machine-gun tracers."

"When the cruiser's searchlight came on," said Kelly, "I turned right to cross her wake and came in on her other quarter. She picked me up astern with her lights and began banging away at me with her secondary batteries—50-calibers and 40-millimeter guns — from about twelve hundred yards. The stuff was going right over our heads in a continuous stream of fire.

"But I was good and mad because our first torpedoes had missed," said Kelly, "so I decided to chase hef. I told one machine-gunner to fire at her searchlight, which was blinding me, and the others to sweep her decks to get her gun crews.

"After a few minutes' chase, we had closed in to three hundred yards —so close that her searchlight seemed to be coming right down on us from an angle—about like the sun in mid-afternoon. Then I drew out onto her starboard quarter and fired our last two torpedoes—an overtaking shot. They were the last two our squadron was to fire in the war.

"Then I gave the boat a hard right rudder and started running away—for we were defenseless now except for our machine guns. But the rain of Jap tracers kept right on, and suddenly another Jap ship showed up fifteen hundred yards away. Both started firing their main batteries at me and we were trapped between—splashes all around us now, as close as twenty-five yards. We started zigzagging wildly, trying to dodge the two searchlights, and also the stream of fire which was crisscrossing above our heads like wicker basketry, and landing in the water all around us. It seemed like weeks, but was probably only a few seconds. My junior officer, Ensign Richardson, had the wheel, while I was watching the cruiser through my binoculars. Suddenly I saw a big splash and detonation in the middle of her belly—another two seconds, another splash and detonation right in her engine room! Our overtaking shots had both hits home! Her searchlight went from bright yellow to orange to red to dull brick-red and finally winked out. Every gun stopped firing. She was jet-black now.

"But I didn't have much time for philosophizing, because this other destroyer was on my starboard bow, closing in, banging away with her 5½-inch guns and me with only 50-caliber machine guns left."

"Kelly got twenty-three salvoes of 5½-inch steel that night," said Bulkeley. "But there was no doubt that his two torpedoes polished off the cruiser. I saw her searchlight fade out, and heavy yellow smoke arise. Her stern was under in three minutes—the destroyer put the searchlight on her decks, where the Japs were all running around, not knowing where to go—and she had sunk in twenty.

"But I was running around with three destroyers after me, which were firing all they had, and I could see another one hot on Kelly's tail. That was the last I could see of him and I thought he was a goner.

"My destroyers chased me down to Misamis, but at dawn I dove into a place to hide—there were six miles of shallow water where they couldn't follow even if they had seen me. We spent the day sleeping."

GOD CALLS A LEADER

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 3:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt.—Exodus 1:10.

God calls men, commissions, and uses them to carry out His plans and purposes in the earth. What a great truth that is, and how it glorifies the destiny of man to know that it is divinely appointed.

As Joseph Parker effectively points out, the experience of Moses in Midian was a direct dealing with God, whereas we who may not be able to "see the fountain" must "be content to drink at the stream," but should always remember that the stream flows from that same fountain.

"Every man should put to himself the questions, What is my destiny? What does God mean me to be and to do in the world? . . . It is a most pitiable thing that a man should read of Moses being divinely called . . . to a special work" and fail to realize "that God has a special work for every man to do." Let us be careful that we do not "so pervert and misinterpret circumstances as to press them into a justification of self-will," rather than recognize them as "destiny which is beckoning us to duty."

For our instruction and guidance we consider, then, the story of the call of this outstanding leader of Israel. It presents him as a true servant of God, one who was—

I. Personally Equipped.

While it is a blessed truth that God will use any man who surrenders himself to His control and guidance, no matter how limited that man's ability and training may be, it is also true that, other things being equal, the man with the best equipment will be the most useful servant.

God gave Moses a unique preparation. He was first of all a Hebrew, born among the people that he was to lead. He knew the luxury and all the cultural advantages of the Egyptian court (Acts 7:22), with the safeguard of training by his own mother as his nurse.

He observed at first hand the oppression of his people, and made a self-willed and impulsive effort to deal with the problem. The result was that he had a "postgraduate" course of instruction and discipline in the wilderness, where he spent forty years in the school of experience.

We have learned anew from our war experience that training for service is essential. If that is true in military matters and in secular life, it is doubly true in the service of Christ. He does graciously use even the humble and untrained worker, but no one who has a vision of service will be content to remain unprepared.

II. Spiritually Qualified.

Moses was a man who knew God. Had he been a worldly man he would only have been curious regarding the phenomenon of the burning bush. But note how alert and reverent he was and how immediately responsive to the instructions and the call of God.

Here God's future leader was made conscious of the infinite majesty and holiness of God, the need of reverence and godly fear, the purpose of the Eternal One to deliver His people, and the assurance that He would be with His servant. Such a spiritual experience made effective the excellent preparation which he already had for service.

All the training and preparation in the world is worse than useless in God's service apart from that spiritual qualification that comes from true regeneration and dedication to Him.

There is no more pathetic sight than a spiritually powerless church worker going through the motions of service for Christ. If we are in that condition we may be sure that we deceive no one but ourselves.

III. Divinely Called.

Moses was called (v. 4), commissioned (vv. 6-10), and clad with divine authority (vv. 11, 12) for his great task.

God calls His servants to different responsibilities and in different ways, but the important thing is that we should know that we are in His will and that we are answering His call.

No one has any right to choose full-time Christian service simply as a desirable vocation. In any calling of life man needs God's guidance in order to make a proper choice, but in the ministry or missionary service it is an absolute essential.

If we were more careful to seek His will for every individual there would be less unhappiness in the world. But in the case of the one who goes out to speak for God there is not only the danger of distress, but of real disaster for himself and those to whom he tries to minister.

Prepared, qualified, and called, Moses is now ready to meet God before he goes on to his life of holy exploits for Him.

PIGMENTED SPOTS ON FACE

One of the distressing ailments that comes usually toward middle age in women is coffee colored spots, usually on the face, about the eyes and cheeks, on the arms and knees. The cause of these spots is unknown but physicians have found that after correcting any ailments of ovaries and uterus, these spots disappear, quite often. Removal of these spots and careful examination of them under the microscope show that they are not the usual pigmented blood spots nor exactly like the spots which occur so often at or during the menopause.

Dr. Barton

In an extract from a medical journal published in Montevideo in the Journal of the American Medical Association, Dr. F. Rocca reports a case of pigmented spots on the face cured by injection and local application of ovary extract.

Twice a week, for a period of several months, 5,000 International units of ovary extract (estrone) was administered by injection. These injections regulated the monthly periods, the nervousness and shock became less and the spots on the face began to clear up. An estrone ointment was now applied to the facial spots for 20 days. It was observed that some spots disappeared and others became lighter.

The ointment treatment of the spots and the injections were continued for several months, when the pigmentation had decreased greatly on the face and in many parts of the body.

One year after this ovary or gland treatment was stopped, small spots began to appear about the eyes.

Now this is only one case, but when we remember that in some of these cases the spots disappear without treatment and that others disappear with the correction of genital ailments, it will certainly be much worth while for our women's specialists and general practitioners also, to try this treatment on these coffee-colored spots.

When we remember how ovary extract in the great majority of cases gives relief from the symptoms of the menopause, it is not too much to expect that at last a remedy has been found to remove these embarrassing coffee-colored spots.

Insulin Injections Stimulate Appetite

Just as most overweights have a large appetite and eat much more than they need, so most cases of underweight are rather "picky" about their food and have a small appetite. And just as the overweights choose the starches and fats (fat builders), so most underweights choose meats, leafy vegetables and fruits (which are not fat builders). There are exceptions to this, of course.

I have spoken before of the use in Canada and the United States of insulin in stimulating the appetite. In the American Journal of Sciences, Philadelphia, is a report from Brazil recording the results of using insulin in underweight patients. Dr. J. B. Greer and his associates treated 30 underweight patients with insulin with "most satisfactory results." They injected insulin just once a day, beginning with eight units and increasing according to the patient's appetite on the previous day; never more than 30 units were injected.

The injection was made about 45 minutes before the noon meal, but the patients were advised to eat when they began to get hungry. When the weight became normal for the patient's height and build, the injections of insulin were gradually discontinued.

This injection of the insulin only once a day and stopping it gradually, protects the glands of the pancreas that manufacture the insulin. It removes the burden of work from them for the time being.

"The unanimous statement of the patients was that they ate as never before in their lives."

There are, of course, many cases of underweight due to infection which "uses up" some of the food eaten. There are other cases of underweight where too much play, not enough sleep, not enough outdoors are factors in preventing gain in weight.

It is gratifying to know that the injection of insulin when stomach is empty will create an appetite in underweights.

Cordell Hull, Always The Perfect Diplomat

Col. Harold B. Hinton, now with the U. S. army headquarters in London, has written a life of Cordell Hull, United States secretary of state, which is being published in England. He tells the following tale:

Hull has always been famous for his reluctance to commit himself—and even at the beginning of his political career disliked making a definite statement about anything. However, one self-confident man bet that he could get a direct answer from the cautious Tennessee legislator.

"What is the time, Mr. Hull?" he asked.

Hull took out his watch, looked at it, and then said: "What does your watch say?"

One thing a soldier is afraid of is a display of emotion. That's why his slang so often sounds derogatory. For example, he refers to the silver eagles on his colonel's shoulder straps as "buzzards." But when he speaks of his favorite cigarette, he says: "Camels." They're first with men in the Army as well as with Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen. (According to actual sales records in service men's stores.) And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The first privately owned turnpike toll company to be organized in this country was the Philadelphia and Lancaster Turnpike Co., incorporated in 1792. New York was the first state to charge an automobile registration fee to pay highway costs and in 1901 collected $954 in such fees.

In 1843 an English woman obtained a patent for a pavement material consisting, among other things, of "oil rubber."

Eleven per cent of the tires of the 25,400 passenger cars on New Jersey farms were found to be "bald" in a check made by Rutgers University.

BEDTIME STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

CHATTERER AND SAMMY JAY QUARREL

When people lose their tempers,
Oh, what a sorry sight!
They call each other dreadful names
And sometimes scratch and bite.
The Merry Little Breezes ran
And hid themselves away
When Chatterer his temper lost,
And so did Sammy Jay.

It really was too dreadful! It quite spoiled the day for all the little people who were within sound of their voices. You see, Sammy Jay had discovered that it was Chatterer and not a trap set by Farmer Brown's Boy that had given him such a fright at Farmer Brown's corn-crib, and right away Sammy's temper just boiled over. Chatterer had his mouth so full of corn that he couldn't say a word, but he could run and run he did — scampering across Farmer Brown's dooryard to the shelter of the old stone wall on the edge of the Old Orchard with Sammy after him screaming, "Thief! thief! thief!" at the top of his lungs.

"My gracious, what a racket!" exclaimed Farmer Brown's Boy as he opened the door. "That Jay is making such a fuss that I should think there was a fox about." He put his milk pails down and stepped back into the house. In a minute he was out again with his terrible gun in his hands. He went straight to the old stone wall, where only a few minutes before Reddy Fox had been hiding, and it was well for Reddy that he had slipped away the minute Sammy Jay began to scream at Chatterer. Farmer Brown's Boy looked disappointed when he saw no signs of Reddy. Then he went over to the little house of Bowser the Hound and unchained Bowser. Bowser wagged his tail and yelped with delight when he saw the gun, for he dearly loved to hunt. He ran ahead back to the Old Orchard, and almost at once his great deep voice told all within hearing that his wonderful nose had found the tracks of Reddy Fox.

In a minute he was out again with his terrible gun.

"I thought so," said Farmer Brown's Boy. "I thought there had been a fox here." Then he sighed, for he would have liked nothing better than to go hunt for Reddy. But there were the empty milk pails, and Farmer Brown's Boy is not the kind who runs away for pleasure when there is work to be done. He called Bowser and chained him up again, and then went to the barn.

Sammy Jay had flown away as soon as he saw Farmer Brown's Boy and his terrible gun. Chatterer had hidden in the old stone wall, where he safely stored away the corn with which his cheeks had been stuffed. As soon as Farmer Brown's Boy had gone to the barn to milk the cows, Sammy Jay slipped back to the Old Orchard to look for Chatterer and his temper hadn't improved a bit. He soon saw Chatterer running along the old wall and once more began to scream, "Thief! thief!" And now that his mouth was empty Chatterer could reply, and you know Chatterer has one of the worst tongues of all the little people of the Green Forest.

"Thief, yourself!" he screamed back. "Thief, yourself! You stole my corn!"

"It isn't your corn any more than it's mine!" screamed Sammy, "I told you about it in the first place. Thief! thief! thief!"

And from that they fell to calling each other worse things. The Old Orchard never had heard such a quarrel—never! It was dreadful! All day long they kept it up. Twice Farmer Brown's Boy came down to see if that Fox had come back, and he scratched his head and wondered what all the fuss was about. At last, Sammy Jay had a thought.

"I'm going straight over to the Green Forest to tell Shadow the Weasel where you are living!" he cried suddenly. "When he finds you you won't steal any more corn or be so greedy that you won't let other people have a share."

The Americans Creed

"I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign nation of many sovereign states; a perfect union, one and inseperable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes."

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.

(Written by William Tyler Page, Clerk of the House of Representatives, in 1917; accepted by the House on behalf of the American people, April 3, 1918.)

William Tyler Page's The American Creed was imbeded deeply in the hearts of the American people during the last World War, and doubly significant to me, as I stood on the steps that lead up to the Rotunda entrance of our National Capitol Building where it was first presented to a vast crowd assembled in front of the building, and I'll never forget the tremendous ovation that sevelled from thousands of throats on that chilly winter afternoon; and then again when it was approved by the House of Representatives for the American people April 3, 1918.

I believe it was then that I a lad sixteen years old began to take interest in political affairs. I know my heart swelled with pride, as did the hearts of the other Page boys there, and we were so inspired that we organized a Junior House of Representatives of our own.

To me that creed is the embodiment of the Democrat Party, and I know that I have never regretted my party affiliation.

I have been a Democratic voter for twenty-one years and during that time I've never had to regret or make apologies for the actions of our Democrat Administration.

As a candidate before the Electorate of our two counties in this district for the party nomination for State Representative, I want you to know there is a glad handclasp of Democratic party affiliation to each and every one of you. It may not be possible to see each one individually for time will not permit, but through the Press of our two counties I want to have an article or a message in each week to let you know how I stand on various issues and what my platform will be.

You know my Democratic beliefs and I want the voters of this district whose political policies coincide with mine to line up with me and cast their votes along those party beliefs, for me.

Young men seventeen or eighteen years old just ready to finish high school and enter college have been drafted or have volunteered for military service with our Armed Forces; to this stalwart army of young American boys I want to extend the heartiest congratulations, for you will find that eighty per cent of them have volunteered. Many of these boys hearts were centered on a college career and I want to go on record now, and state if I am elected to the office of Representative I will make every effort to have a bill passed whereby any of these youngsters when they return to their homes after the war is over it will be possible by State approval for them to enter our State University either through Scholarship or Co-operative Courses. I think this would be a splendid opportunity to let these youngsters know that we at home are interested in their educational career.

By law they as minors have no voice (by ballot) in our governmental affairs and yet ("whose just powers are derived from the government") they are shouldering without a murmur our military responsibilities.

To the parents of these boys who have left the ties of the home to fight for the American way of life, let me help these lads (when they return home to you) by your ballot finish their education by enacting into law a bill whereby it will be made possible.

I stand four square on the pledge I made in my announcement for this office and will be ever constant in those purposes.

Kenneth E. (Jack) Johnson
Candidate State Representative.

Thank You

AMERICANS are learning that war reaches deep into the lives of all. There are dislocations of accustomed practices—from torn homes to much less consequential disruptions. Meat and shoes, soup and gasoline are on a share basis, neighbor with neighbor, state with state.

The sharing of gasoline, for example, has thrown a nation-on-wheels "out of gear." Daily going and coming have been revolutionized for millions. Yet with a minimum of confusion and complaint. For our part, we pay our respects to the motorists of the South for the spirit and aptitude with which they have met these wholly strange methods and procedures.

Thank you, Southern car- and truck-drivers. You have shared your gasoline without grumbling. You have quietly adapted yourselves to the coupon, to the tire inspection requirements and to the sometimes annoying details of regulation. The oil industry is carrying a heavy burden in the performance of its distribution and marketing obligations to the Government and to you.

Thank you for your help.

NICHOLSON

"The Lord is a shield and fortress." He alone sustains when shadows fall."

"There are stars that go out in the darkness, But whose silvery light shineth on, There are roses whose perfume still lingers, when the blossoms are faded and gone."

A shodow of deep sorrow was cast upon the household of Mrs. E. B. Rankins at her passing Friday evening, June 25, 1943. Long had she lingered on the borderland, but every effort put forth to restoration proved futile, and despite kindly, untiring ministrations and constant attendance of the faithful nurse, her spirit like the shadow of a passing cloud was wafted gently and sweetly to realms beyond and as silently as the night glides into the day, was she ushered into that "home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." In the warm atmosphere of love the eventide of her life was spent, and nothing that loving hearts could do was left undone to give her comfort and peace.

On Monday afternoon, Rev. R. F. DeMoisey of Walton, assisted by Rev. White officiated at the last sad rites at her beautiful home where she had, for years, so graciously presided. Banked about the handsome casket were baskets of rarest blossoms, transforming the room in to a bower of floral beauty. Lovely tributes were paid by both local merchants in closing their stores during the funeral services. Following the rites, interment took place in the city of silence in Independence Cemetery by the side of her beloved husband, where her remains sweetly slumber in the quietude of the hills awaiting the dawn without a sunset. How deep would be the grief over the grave did not the rainbow of Christian hope span the dark gulf between time and eternity. Survivors include: Mr. Oscar Rankins, highly efficient Treasurer of Kenton Co.; Mr. VeMont Rankin; Mrs. John Hume; Mrs. Nell Rankin White, Mrs. Howard Congdom and six grandchildren to whom deepest sympathy is extended.

Dr. Charles Petty, Mr. Neuman Armtrong, Mr. Clifford Northcutt, Mr. William Schoborg, Mr. Ovo Petty and Mr. Willoughby Mires served as pallbearers.

In her young womanhood she became a member of the M. E. Church, and her kindly deeds, like silent threads of gold, when woven together gleam out brightly in the drab pattern of lives less fortunate. She was socially prominent, a woman of high ideals and noble purposes, and like the afterglow of the sunset the warmth and radiance of her pleasing personality shall long linger in our memory. "They are not dead who live in hearts they leave behind in those whom they have blest, They live a life again."

Service on the Home Front

In this issue, we are runinng the first of a series of advertisements for the Standard Oil Company, which we commend to the special attention of our readers.

These are unique, in that they make no mention of Standard Oil products. They are designed to let the public know what Standard Oil agents, dealers, tank-wagon drivers, etc., are doing on the home front in the present war emergency.

The Standard Oil Compan has been serving the people of Boone county for many years. They began this service back in the days when coal-oil and axle grease were their principal products, when roads were bad, and when serving the rural South was difficult. In those days, we didn't have electricity, and the people depended upon the Standard Oil Company for the kerosene to light their lamps. And good weather or bad, they always managed to get this kersone to us.

When the automobile came along, they made gasoline and motor-oil available from one end of Kentucky to the other. They've never forgotten their country fiends, who were their first customers. Today, wherever we drive we're never far from a Standard station.

The Standard Oil Company of Kentucky is a good example of a Southern business organization—of the South, for the South, and by the South—serving the people of the South with necessary products of dependability.

NOTICE—

The W. M. S. of the Walton Baptist church will meet in the church, Thursday, July 15th Business session at 11 o'clock followed by lunch and social hour. Program at 1:30, Mrs. Tom Percival, Leader. Topic for the month, "The Witness of the Lighted Lamp."

Meat Slaughterers Must Register

The present scarcity of meat in many markets of Eastern Kentucky is largely due to improper slaughtering operations. These operations have upset normal channels of supply.

According to E. Reed Wilson, Director of OPA Lexington Office, public buying of meat from Black Market sources is hampering War Effort, is upsetting legitimate supply sources and is endangering public health. He says it has long been recognized by State and Federal Health authorities that uninspected meat endangers public health. If not diseased at all slaughter, such meat is usually exposed to many forms of contamination due to unsanitary conditions of such unlicensed killing establishments. Nearly all meat so slaughtered is unfit for human consumption.

In protection to public health and our War Rationing Meats Program, an investigation will be launched in the immediate future to unearth all unlawful slaughtering operations. Violations of regulations covering registration, selling and point accounting are punishable by law. Unregistered slaughterers will be prosecuted.

Mr. Wilson explains that all slaughtering of livestock for sale, gift or transfer of meats must be done under permits issued by the Department of Agriculture and OPA regulations. Small Home or Country Slaughterers who sell, give or transfer meat, butter or rationed cheeses must qualify by registration with their County War Production Board of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. They must also qualify and register with their local War Price & Rationing Board before they can lawfully sell any of their production. Any person who has or is now slaughtering, producing and selling meats without being registered is subject to punishment as a violator.

Farm Home Producers may consume what they produce at home, point free, without registration. Any meat slaughtered and butter or cheese produced must be consumed by themselves, their immediate family or farm labor residents. It must not be sold, given away or transferred for profit in any form. If they dispose of any part of such production for commercial gain, they must register as small home or country slaughterers or processors.

Any civilian or industrialist can obtain a full knowledge of their privileges and restrictions governing slaughtering through their local War Price & Rationing Board.

Feed Shortage Makes Hay Extra Important

Because of the probability of a shortage of grain feed, the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics suggests that as much hay as possible be saved this year. Indications are that hay will bring a good price, and farmers who have more than they can use will find a ready market for it.

While all kinds of hay should be saved, it is desirable that hay be cut when it contains the most nutrients, particularly digestible proteins, and that it be cured without injury. The best quality hay is made when the legume or grass is cut at a rather immature stage. Timothy, for instance, makes good hay when cut in full bloom or slightly before, but if left until seed is formed it becomes woody and unsatisfactory for sheep and dairy cows.

Alfalfa makes the best hay when cut in about one-third bloom. In curing alfalfa or clover it is important that as many leaves as possible be saved and that it retain the green color as much as possible.

The best hay is made by raking into windrows with a side-delivery rake just as soon as it is fully wilted. If a sulky rake is used, the windrows should be small. If allowed to remain long in the swath the leaves dry so rapidly that most of them will be lost.

Lespedeza has become one of the important hay crops in Kentucky. While not as good as alfalfa or red clover, it makes good hay when cut at the proper time and is well cured. It should be cut when the first blooms appear and before the leaves at the bottom of the stems begin to drop off. If allowed to mature, lespedza hay is unpalatable and of little feeding value.

Clemson Soldiers Term Anderson "Nicest City"

Large Number Of Trainees Sign Letter Expressing Thanks To Local Citizens.

A letter to The Daily Mail, wirtten by William K. Durr, and signed by eight-one other aircrew soldiers stationed at Clemson, today expressed appreciation for the invitation that has been extended by Anderson residents to soldiers to spend the Father's Day weekend in the city.

The soldier declared that "Anderson people are the nicest I have ever know."

The text of the communication follows:

"I read the article in The Daily Mail concerning the inviting of soldiers to homes of Andersonians next Sunday and I wish to express my gratitude for the swell things you are trying to do.

"Most of my week-ends since I came here have been spent in Anderson, and I want you to know that it is one of the nicest cities I have ever been in, with no reflection on my own home city. I can truthfully say that the people of Anderson are the nicest I have ever known. They are all friendly, and treat us as if we were old friends, and not strangers.

"The food we get in the army is good, but I speak for myself and everyone else here when I say that we enjoy a home cooked meal once in awhile more than you could begin to realize.

"I had the privilege of eating dinner last Sunday in an Anderson home, and really had the best time since I left home. It would be grand if a lot of homes in Anderson would follow this example.

"This letter represents not only the feeling of an individual, but a majority of the boys here."

The letter was signed by eighty-one aircrew soldiers.

THEY WERE EXPENDABLE

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. After taking General MacArthur and his party safely to Cebu, in the southern islands, Squadron 3 prepared to participate in a "great offensive" planned against the Japs. But our planes and ships that were supposed to come didn't appear, and Lieut. Kelly's boat and the one Lieut. Bulkeley was riding in were forced into hiding.

CHAPTER XIII

"They didn't get us then," said Kelly. "At midnight our escape began. The destroyer lost me with its light temporarily, so I did a ninety-degree turn so as to pass astern of her and lose her. I continued on that course five minutes, heading directly away from her, then to the left in another ninety-degree turn, and I started looking around the ship.

"I found Reynolds, my port gunner (he was also cook), had been shot through the throat and shoulder. I got him down below and had the chief torpedoman and the radioman give him first aid.

"I found our mast had been shot off a foot over my head, so we couldn't use our radio for sending. The port turret had been hit and its guns were out of action.

"Our objective now was to get Reynolds to a doctor. We were going like a bat out of hell. I couldn't see the 41 boat—it was so dark I couldn't even see the shore. I just had to look at the compass and make mental estimates as to how far we had gone in various directions since I last had seen land I recognized, and then guess where we now were. I thought we were near the narrow channel between the islands; would another Jap destroyer be laying for me there?

"Suddenly, directly ahead, a searchlight came on, less than a mile away—a Jap steaming full speed at me. I barely had time to give a hard left and a hard right and we went scooting past each other at a relative speed of sixty knots before he had a chance to fire a shot. He turned, holding me down with his light like a bug under a pin, and started chasing, blazing away with big guns—two splashes four hundred feet away, two more fifty feet away. I started zigging to aquirm out of that light—wouldn't let my gunnera fire a shot; it would help him keep our position. I was getting away, all right, but he kept firing for ten minutes, although his accuracy was going to hell. By 1:30 I could barely see his light, which was waving around, searching the water back of us.

"I kept on, wide-open, wondering how we'd ever get in, since we had no charts, it was black as pitch, and I knew coral reefs must be all around us. At four o'clock I slowed down and headed into where I hoped the beach was, taking soundings. The water suddenly shoaled off and bump! we were aground—a pinnacle of coral under her belly. Looking down with flashlight we could see the water was twenty feet deep with coral pinnacles all around us about every twenty feet, like a petrified forest, rising to within five feet of the surface.

"Studying the shore line, I realized we were about ten miles too far up the coast. I sent Ensign Richardson ashore in a rowboat to send an army doctor and ambulance out from Cebu for Reynolds, and also a tug for us.

"For the next hour we sallied shiprocking it, trying to jiggle it off the pinnacle, backing with the engines—and finally managed to roll it off.

"Reynolds was feeling fine now. I'd suddenly remembered a little present Peggy had given me on the Rock, went down to my locker and brought it up for him—a couple of codein tablets and a sedative pill. Now he was sitting topside smoking, although he couldn't drink because the water would leak out the hole in his throat. They'd been short of drugs on the Rock, but she sneaked these out for me just in case I got wounded out on patrol. A hell of a thoughtful present, and much more valuable and useful than a gold cigarette case.

"Dawn came with a low fog which shut out the coastal contours, and because of all the coral we had to stand well off the coast. The sun was well up but that didn't worry me; with air superiority we didn't need to stalk in the dark any more. By 7:30 the sun had burned the fog away and we started out on two engines—one screw had banged up on the coral but that didn't matter—we were crippled now, but 'Dad' Cleland would quickly fix us. At eight o'clock we spotted the entrance to the long channel and turned in.

"So there we were, fat, dumb, and happy, heading up the narrow channel at fifteen knots, when all of a sudden—Whami It was a hundred-pound bomb which landed about ten feet off our bow.

"Then I looked up, and here a second plane was peeling off, coming out of a cloud. But instead of the big white stars of the American air corps on her wings, there were the flaming suns of Japan!

"I didn't have time even to wonder what in hell had become of our big American offensive and the air umbrella, because I had to throttle back, stopping the boat momentarily so that the next bomb would land twenty-five feet in front instead of squarely on us. Then I gave her the gun and started trying to zigzag in that narrow four-hundred-foot-wide channel, meanwhile giving word to our machine guns to start firing.

"They bombed us for thirty minutes, and the farthest bomb was thirty feet away. We would wait for the bomb release, see it start falling, then I'd give hard rudder and it would miss by a few feet. All the while we had to keep in this narrow channel so we couldn't be beached helplessly on a coral reef, and work our way down it toward port, where presently some of the newly arrived American planes would see what was going on and come to help. We didn't doubt, of course, that they'd arrived. Four Jap seaplanes were after us, working in rotation—undoubtedly those from the second cruiser the army had reported as being around.

"When their bombs were exhausted they began diving down just over our mast stub to strafe us. With their first salvo they killed Harris. He was my torpedoman and also manning the starboard 50-caliber machine guns—a fine kid he was—he slumped down from his guns and rolled on the deck when a bullet ripped into his throat. So I put in

"But meanwhile Ross had shot down one of the four planes."

Martino, or started to, but found they had also hit the gun and put it out of action.

"But meanwhile Ross, with the starboard 30-caliber machine guns, had shot down one of the four planes. The next plane got Ross in the leg, and also put out his gun. So we now had no guns, only two engines and a boat full of holes with three planes diving down to less than one hundred feet, raking us with fire which we couldn't return—only try to dodge.

"The engineer now reported the engine room was full of water and the boat was sinking, so there was nothing to do but beach her, if we were to save the wounded men. I headed her over towards nearby Kawit Island, and there she beached hard and fast. There were about twelve hundred yards of shallow surf, four feet of water over an uneven bottom of coral and sand, and then the palms. The planes kept up their strafing as we lay there, but there was nothing to do now but dodge while we got the wounded ashore.

"I went down into the engine room and there was Hunter, my chief machinist's mate, with his arm practically blown off—a bullet had entered his elbow and gone out a three inch hole in his forearm, but he was still manning the engines. I gave the order to abandon ship. It turned out that there were only three of us unhit, so it was a job getting the wounded out while the Japanese dived to rake us. We made the mistake of taking off our shoes, and the coral cut our feet to ribbons as we staggered carrying the men.

"I found Reynolds, who had been wounded in the throat during the night, now lying with his hand over his belly.

"'Mr. Kelly,' he said, 'leave me here.'

"'What happened?' I asked.

"'When the planes attacked,' he said, 'there didn't seem to be anything for me to do, so I went below and lay down on Mr. Brantingham's bunk. They hit me in the belly while I was lying there. I'm done for, sir. I'll be all right here. You get out the others.'

"'Well, the hell with that. So in spite of his protests, Martino and I carried him ashore. Then we went back for a last trip. Only Harris was left, lying where he had tumbled into the tank compartment. But the radioman and I carried his body ashore, because we hoped to give him a decent burial.

After reaching shore at Cebu Island, Lieutenant Kelly turned his attention to his casualties.

"I rounded up some native soldiers, who got stretchers, and in these we carried the wounded to the other side of the island where they could be loaded into a launch, putting them in charge of Sheppard, a first-class machinist's mate, to get them to the hospital.

"At this point a banca showed up, and it was a native doctor, the one we had sent Ensign Richardson ashore for, before dawn, for Reynolds, who by now was en route to the hospital. So I loaded the ship's papers, binoculars, and stuff into this banca, and with them I shoved off for Cebu.

"Halfway over the three planes came back and we tried to hide behind a fish trap—a net with bamboo poles sticking up out of the water. But they weren't strafing now. They were looking for the fourth plane we'd shot down. They scoured the area for twenty minutes. After they left we went on in, and of course I went straight to army headquarters, and met the colonel in charge—the No. 2 officer of the island. No, he hadn't heard from Bulkeley, but he'd send out a radio message to hunt for him if he was still alive. And maybe I'd better give my report direct to the general. I wanted to, and also I wanted to find out what had happened to our big American Offensive we had been asked to be part of, and that air umbrella which should have protected us this morning.

"The general had been having a conference at the bar of the American Club, sitting with some other officers and some civilians who were now all having a drink. Now a general is pretty important, and you don't just go barging into his conferences—not if you're a mere naval lieutenant in command of a little seventy-foot boat. So, following the lead of this conducting colonel, we stood off a bit and waited until the general gave us the signal to come on in and tie up at his table. He saw us all right, but he didn't give us the signal—just went on talking to the other officers and civilians.

"Now, thinking back, I realize it was a most important conference. But at the time I was excited, because I had just come from my boat in which I'd fought all through the war and with which we'd just helped to sink a Jap cruiser—my boat which was now lying beached across the bay, with one man dead, another dying, and all the rest but three wounded. I suppose I was unstrung. I wanted to have him make my report by radio about the cruiser. And then, although maybe it wasn't my business, I'd have liked to find out about that American offensive he'd invited us to join the night before.

"We kept standing there, the two of us, while I got madder and madder. I see now it was unreasonable, but I couldn't help it then. Finally it embarrassed even the colonel and he invited me to step over by the bar and have a drink with him. I said no, thanks, I had work to do, but I'd have a Coca Cola. I stuck around ten more minutes drinking it and then, since the general gave us no signal, I shoved off.

"I arranged to have the boat guarded. Because I wouldn't yet admit that maybe both it and we were expended now. High tide was at four o'clock. Couldn't we maybe patch her up, float her over to 'Dad' Cleland's, get torpedoes and a crew from somewhere, and maybe fight her just once again?

"I went over there to where Brantingham and the 35 boat were, taking the stuff I'd salvaged from the boat, and they gave me some lunch as I talked about the fight and what had happened to us, and during it Ensign Richardson telephoned. He said Reynolds had died, and they were burying him and Harris in the American cemetery with a military escort and a priest, at four o'clock. I said of course I would go, and would meet Richardson at the bar of the American Club, from which we'd go over together.

"I got there but Richardson didn't show up. I stood around. I was tired and mad and lonesome as hell. Finally a civilian came up—and I got to talking to him. He was a very nice guy—vice president of the club. I told him our story and he said how sorry he was, and asked if he might go to the funeral. He was the first sympathetic person I'd met.

"Presently a truck arrived, driven by a Filipino soldier with a message for me that the funeral had been postponed until ten o'clock tomorrow. This American found out I knew nobody in Cebu, hadn't slept, and had no place to go, so he invited me out to his house for dinner and the night. Before I went, I located our three men who were unwounded. I gave them fifty pesos and told them to go ashore and get drunk and forget the whole mess—if they could.

Ancient Fishing Methods Still Prevalent in Malta

Precisely as did their forebears in biblical days, the inhabitants of the quaint fishing villages of Marsa and Zurrico, on the island of Malta, in the Mediterranean, today follow the life of the fisherman for their livelihood.

Many of the old fishing methods employed in the early days are in use today. The fishermen use a peculiar type of trap attached to their boat, instead of the nets commonly employed.

Fishermen of Malta are happy, now that the Allies dominate the Mediterranean. No longer do they have to fear the Axis aerial attacks to which they were subjected day after day before the rout of Rommel in Africa.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Recapped tires will render satisfactory service—if the tire carcass is in good condition, good workmanship is exercised, inflation rules are observed and speed is kept to 35 mph. Have your tires recapped at a reliable shop.

Scientists have developed the fact that when a car is driven at 50 mph there is a centrifugal force of two tons trying to pull the tires apart.

That our standard of living is effected in many ways by the shortage of rubber will be appreciated when it is known that normally about 50,000 items were made with rubber.

CHATTERER AND SAMMY JAY MAKE UP

WHEN Chatterer the Red Squirrel heard Sammy Jay say that he was going straight to the Green Forest to tell Shadow the Weasel that Chatterer was living in the Old Orchard a great fear filled his heart. He forgot his quarrel with Sammy. He forgot his greed for all the corn in Farmer Brown's cornerib. He forgot everything but his terrible fear of Shadow the Weasel. It was because of Shadow that Chatterer had left the Green Forest to live in the Old Orchard. If Shadow should find him here, he didn't know what he could do or where he could go.

He knew that Sammy Jay meant just what he said, for, though it would be a dreadful thing to do, people do dreadful things when they are angry; and Sammy Jay was very, very angry, indeed. He already had spread his wings when Chatterer spoke.

"Please don't do that, Sammy Jay," he begged. "I—I—didn't mean all the bad things I have said."

Sammy Jay's eyes snapped. He saw right away that Chatterer was very much frightened and he knew that in the future, so long as Shadow the Weasel was anywhere around, Chatterer would be so afraid that he would do anything Sammy might want him to. You see, Sammy Jay is very sharp.

"Am I any more of a thief than you are?" he demanded.

"No-o-o-o," replied Chatterer slowly, as if it were the hardest work to say it.

"Will you play any more tricks on me?" asked Sammy.

"No," replied Chatterer, more promptly this time.

"Well, I'll think it over and make up my mind in the morning," said

"I promise!" cried Chatterer hastily.

Sammy. "Perhaps I will and perhaps I won't tell Shadow where you are living. I'll think it over."

Now Sammy knew perfectly well that Chatterer wouldn't sleep a wink that night for worrying. Already he had made up his mind not to tell Shadow, for, like all the other little meadow and forest people, he hated Shadow. But, of course, Chatterer couldn't know that. He had so made up his mind, and a great fear that Sammy might tell clutched his heart. Chatterer thought very hard for a minute, and then an idea came.

"If you'll promise not to tell Shadow where I am you—you are welcome to all the corn you want at Farmer Brown's cornerib," said Chatterer in a very meek voice.

"Indeed!" replied Sammy. "How very generous of you, seeing that it doesn't belong to you, anyway, and I have just as much right to it as you have."

"And—and—well, I'll help you get it," continued Chatterer, his sharp wits working their hardest to think of some way to get Sammy to make that promise.

"How?" asked Sammy suspiciously.

"Why, when you can't get it between the cracks, I'll bring some out for you and hide it in the stone wall where you can find it," replied Chatterer. But in his heart he said that he would hide it so that Sammy would have to hunt a long time to find it. It seemed almost as if Sammy read that thought, for, cocking his head on one side, he said:

"I'll promise not to tell Shadow if you'll promise to get me corn whenever I want it and put it just where I tell you to."

Chatterer didn't like that idea at all, but what could he do? He thought it over so long that Sammy Jay spread his wings as if he was going to start that very instant for the Green Forest.

"I promise!" cried Chatterer hastily.

And so these two scamps of the Green Forest made up and planned how they would live all the rest of the winter on Farmer Brown's corn.

"Our sufficiency is of God." He alone sustains when shadows fall.

Complimenting Mrs. Bessie Trapp, Thursday, Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Morgan and children entertained with a family gathering. Guests included: Mrs. J. L. Pickett, Mrs. Thomas McClure and daughter Miss Dotty Settle, Mrs. A. P. Griggle and son Geo. and Mrs. Henry Baker and daughter little Miss Carol.

More than fifty floral tributes were sent for the funeral of the late Mrs. E. B. Rankin thus attesting the high esteem and affectionate regard in which she was held, most deeply appreciated were some of the lovely roses and gladoli given by her son, "Somewhere the shadows are lifting while sorrow is veiling our sight for grief and repining a new star is shining and dark is followed by light." News of the tragic deaths of the three little children who recently perished in the flames at Edgewood, was truly appaling and many hearts go out to the bereaved ones in deepest sympathy, it certainly is one of the most difficult things in the world to speak words that will comfort those who have suffered such a bitter trial, mere words seem like for away echoes, and Chirst alone soothes, troubled hearts. Janet Gale and Mary Moffett were the lovely little daughters of Mr. and Mrs. S. Moffett, and grand daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Moffett, local residents. Following last rites at the Independence Baptist church Saturday afternoon, interment took place in the cemetery. Scripture Reading, Poem and Prayer by Rev. W. E. Maners.

Three to four times as much grass was sowed in Daviess county this year as is usually done.

Two hundred people attended the fourth annual farm round-up in Letcher county, held at the farm of Jess Holbrook to discuss food and feed.

There's no PRIORITY on PLANNING

WE'LL have to wait until after Victory for that all-electric kitchen we want, but in the meantime we're getting a lot of pleasure out of planning it. And we're helping to speed the day when it will become a reality by buying War Bonds with every dollar we can spare. After the war, the money we've invested in fighting power will come back to us in the form of buying power... buying power that will make our dreams of an all-electric kitchen come true.

WAR BONDS will finance our post-war ELECTRIC KITCHEN

There's a great incentive for making every sacrifice you can today. For after the war, new materials and new production methods will bring finer electrical appliances and better electrical living for everyone.

THE FUTURE IS WORTH SAVING FOR — BUY MORE WAR BONDS!

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Strong Allied Drive in South Pacific Threatens Main Jap Base in Solomons; Nazis Make New Bid to Cripple Russia Through Attack on Orel-Belgorod Line

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Taking oath as colonel, Oveta Culp Hobby assumes command of the new Women's Army corps, which replaces the WAAC. Pictured with Colonel Hobby from left to right adjutant-general of the army, Gen. Brehon Somervell, Brig. Gen. H. B. Lefis, acting George C. Marshall, and Lieut. Gen.

NAVY STRIKES:
Jap Fleet Hit

The battle in the Southwest Pacific grew in intensity, with the Japs throwing the full weight of their air and sea power against the advancing Allied forces.

Drawn out by the U. S. navy's shelling of the Jap anchorage of Bairoko, through which supplies have been carried to the big enemy air base of Munda on New Georgia island, formations of the Japanese fleet engaged the American ships in the Kula gulf, coming off a poor second best.

According to a communique from General MacArthur's headquarters, no less than six enemy vessels probably were sunk and four damaged. We lost one cruiser, which with a destroyer sunk in the Bairoko bombardment and a transport knocked out in the earlier landings, brought our own known losses to three.

All along the 700 mile front the Japs hurled their aircraft at American positions. Enemy fighters and bombers flew over newly occupied Rendova, struck at General MacArthur's beachhead below Salamaua in New Guinea, and attacked Darwin in northwestern Australia in force. At Salamaua, Allied forces had worked their way through jungle to the northwest, so that with General MacArthur's position, that Jap base was now ringed from three sides.

JAPAN:
Parcels Out Territory

In development of the "great east Asia co-prosperity sphere," Japan ceded four Malay and two Burmese states to the kingdom of Thailand. North of Malaya and east of Burma, Thailand, by its alliance with Japan at the start of the war, provided the Nipponese with a backdoor into these British possessions.

The cession of the Malay states gave Thailand rich rice, tin and rubber producing territories. The population includes more than a million natives. The two Burmese states constitute 24,000 square miles.

The cession was made on occasion of Premier Hediki Tojo's visit to the Thai capital of Bangkok. Tojo later went to Shanghai, where Chandra Bose, exiled Hindu nationalist leader, called for the organization of all rebels for the defeat of the British in India.

WAR PRODUCTION:
Up and Down

Declaring that we are on the verge of one of the greatest trials of our national history, War Production Chairman Donald Nelson revealed that the nation's arms output for May had gained for aircraft and naval vessels, but fallen in other lines.

On a weight basis, airplane production jumped 10 per cent in May, Nelson said, with bomber deliveries up but fighter manufacture unsteady. A total of 204,000 tons of naval vessels were completed.

In other lines, ground ordnance, such as tanks, artillery, etc., was down 3 per cent; merchant vessels were down 4 per cent, and miscellaneous munitions were down 7 per cent.

For the first half of the year, Nelson said the estimated output fell below the goals marked out. Merchant shipping was 44 per cent of the year's objective; army ordnance and naval vessels, 40 per cent, and aircraft 35 per cent.

SUBSIDIES:
Would Limit Expenditures

If President Roosevelt's subsidy program to "roll-back" the price of retail food was to become the administration's bulwark in its anti-inflationary program, congress indicated that it would retain a voice in such a policy by limiting the government's expenditure of money in its operation.

In considering a new Commodity Credit corporation bill which would allow subsidies, the senate banking and currency committee heard Sen. Robert Taft propose an appropriation of 525 million dollars to "roll-back" prices to January 1, 1944. Unless such a limitation were made, Taft said, the government could borrow any amount from the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

President Roosevelt declared it was necessary to "roll-back" food prices to equalize the stabilization of wages. Subsidy opponents contend that such payments will only increase the public debt, and wages generally have risen to a level at which consumers can well afford to buy food at present prices.

RUSSIA:
Nazis Gain

Big guns thundered — airplanes whined in endless swoops — huge tanks rumbled over barren plains; action had come again on the Russian front.

While the Nazis insisted the action was of a local, minor character in segments of the Ukrainian and Kursk provinces in Russian hands, the Reds claimed the Germans had launched a major offensive. Although announcing that they had stopped the advance generally along the 165 mile front, the Reds admitted the Nazis had breached their defenses in the Belgorod sector.

Red reports indicated the Nazis had massed large armored formations in the battle zone. The 1,271 tanks the Russians said they knocked out would be sufficient to outfit four Nazi panzer divisions. In two days the Reds claimed they shot 314 planes out of the sky.

For their part, the Nazis said their infantry had initiated a local attack, and then fighting had flared all along the front.

CANNED GOODS:
Increase Prices

To absorb higher labor and material costs, canners of vegetables and processors of frozen berries were authorized to increase prices of the 1943 pack by the Office of Price Administration.

Prices of canned tomatoes, corn, snap beans and peas, however, will remain at the 1942 level. Seeking to stabilize the prices of these essential commodities, the government will pay subsidies to canners to make up for increased costs.

The OPA also acted to place specific increases on spinach, asparagus, mustard and turnip greens. To reflect wage boosts, canners of spinach were allowed a 4½ per cent boost. Price of the No. 2 can of asparagus was raised 4 cents and mustard and turnip greens were increased 1½ cents.

Increases ranging up to 3 cents a pound were allowed to processors of blueberries, cranberries, currants, dewberries, elderberries, huckleberries, Johnson berries and Olympic berries.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

CONSTRUCTION: All building materials and construction facilities have been placed under the control of the War Production board, "in order to eliminate all non-essential construction."

GRAIN: Oats sold at the highest in 23 years on the Chicago market at 73½ cents a bushel, while rye reached $1.12⅛ recently.

SUGAR: About one-third less acreage was planted in sugar beets this year than last. Leaders of the industry blame shortage of labor, and competition of other crops more favored by governmental aid.

BANKS: The Chase National Bank of New York, the world's largest, reports total assets of $4,482,806,435 in its latest statement.

DADS:
O. K. Draft Delay

By a vote of 11 to 5, the senate military affairs committee voted to delay the induction of fathers until after January 1, 1944. Congressional action on the bill will not be taken until sessions are resumed in September, however, one month before the drafting of fathers is scheduled.

Introduced by Senator Burton Wheeler, the bill provides that any man married before Pearl Harbor, who has maintained bona fide family relationships since that date and has children under 18 years of age, would be exempt from induction until the first of next year.

As the Wheeler bill was being approved by the committee, the War Manpower commission announced that an additional 3,600,000 persons will have to be placed in the services and munitions industries within the next 12 months. Of the total, 2,000,000 men and women will be needed in uniform, 1,500,000 by December 31.

Materialization of the WMC plans will mean that half of the population will either be fighting or working. 11,300,000 will be in the services; 11,600,000 in war industries; 12,000,000 in agriculture, and 30,000,00 in other non-farm work.

POST-WAR WORLD:
What Labor Thinks

How one great union feels about the post-war world was ably expressed by the United Automobile Workers, CIO, in a seven-point program for peace time.

Among other things, the UAW called for government ownership and operation of industries whose monopoly gives them dictation in their fields; the 30-hour week, and a vast public works program, calling for construction of schools, highways and power projects.

Of private industry, the UAW said: "Our industries can no longer be operated to serve private interests where those private interests conflict with the public need. Initiative can find its most useful outlet, greatest recognition and highest reward when exerted in the public service."

The UAW also proposed each soldier be given a $2,500 bonus upon his discharge from the service.

CABINET FEUD:
Jones Answers Wallace

Fur continued to fly in the heated cabinet feud between Vice President Henry Wallace and Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones over Wallace's charges that Jones had throttled activities of the Board of Economic Warfare, and failed to build up an adequate stockpile of tin, rubber, quinine, etc., before Pearl Harbor as directed by congress.

Repeating his previous statement that the Reconstruction Finance corporation which he heads has committed itself to purchase 3½ billion dollars of foreign material, Jones said the BEW initiated only 10 per cent of this business. Then he declared that the RFC cannot sign blank checks for the use of any government agency, and charged Wallace with amending President Roosevelt's original order setting up the BEW to permit approval of BEW transactions without inspection.

In the matter of stockpiles, Jones said our supply of quinine was ample and BEW's program for obtaining the drug in South America failed to take account of that continent's unfamiliarity with producing the bark. BEW accused Jones of overestimating our inventory by 50 per cent, and delaying the BEW's production program.

MEDITERRANEAN:
Adolf Comes to Rescue

Increasing opposition to Allied air raids on Italy and her neighboring islands by swarms of Axis planes, many of them German, indicate that the Nazi air force is being employed in strength in the critical Mediterranean area.

Despite the stiffening resistance, however, Allied planes broke through to pound Palermo to such an extent that the Italian radio admitted that Sicilian air and naval base was of no further use. Allied reconnaissance also disclosed that the Italians had destroyed shipping installations at the harbor of Trapani.

According to American fliers, the Axis met the strong Allied formations with new tactics. Approaching the rear echelons of the Allied squads, the enemy planes flew in a single line, dropping incendiaries that burn into strings of small explosives.

Official Axis circles awaited an attack on Sicily or Sardinia or Corsica. Capture of Sicily would be necessary for an attack on the Italian mainland or protecting Allied convoys bound for the Balkans, they said, while occupation of Corsica and Sardinia would be necessary for an invasion of the French coast.

POLES:
Russian Status Unchanged

The tragic death of Gen. Wladislaw Sikorski, premier of the Polish government-in-exile, has not altered that government's attitude toward Soviet Russia, its officials declared. Poland's attitude will continue to be one of friendliness, with insistence on Polish territorial rights, which have been contested by Russia's claim to portions of the former Polish republic.

GOOD NEIGHBOR

Many a state department official wishes we could fix up Argentina as neatly as Comrade Stalin thinks we can.

When Willkie was in Moscow, Stalin raised a question about Argentina, describing it as the Axis source of information about ship movements. He couldn't understand why such a condition should be allowed to exist.

"If you have so much power," Stalin told Willkie, "why don't you clean up the Argentine government, or take over the country—do something to turn the Axis out of there?"

Willkie found it somewhat difficult to explain that the Good Neighbor policy would prevent such interference, in time of war as in time of peace.

NOTE: State department experts expect that, despite the new Argentine government's reactionary attitude on domestic questions, it will be driven to break relations with the Axis, in order to get lend-lease supplies from the United States. This is what Latin generals want most.

HUMANE BOMBING

Strange as it may seem, the United States air forces are planning the humane bombing of Germany. They want to avoid killing people and destroying non-military buildings. They want to bring the war to a merciful ending.

High ranking officers of the air forces are urging that we conduct our bombing operations in such a way that unnecessary destruction of enemy life and property shall be held to a minimum.

This is part of their thesis in favor of precision, or "pin-point" bombing, as contrasted with the "area" bombing of the RAF. The precision bombing, carried on in daylight, is able to pick out the precise military target, and destroy that without laying waste to an entire city, or killing helpless civilians.

These air forces officers speak of the post-war attitude of nations toward each other, emphasizing that careless bombing would intensify the hatreds of war, and make it more difficult to build a peaceful world.

Somebody will have to rebuild the bombed cities of Europe. World ties are now so close that no great areas of destruction can be allowed to remain; rebuilding will have to be done, and only the victors will have the power to do the work.

Therefore, say these exponents of precision bombing, let us have no indiscriminate bombing, but only a precision job, which spares the life and property of the enemy as much as possible.

CHURCHILL THE PROPHET

Students of air power have dug up an old statement of Winston Churchill's, written in 1917, which reveals an amazing foresight in the possibilities and limitations of aerial bombing.

As everybody knows, the Nazi blitz against England, intended to terrorize the people, failed in its objective. On the other hand, the more scientific bombing of the continent by the RAF and AAF—strategic bombing—is now expected to bring Hitler to his knees.

Churchill seemed to foresee both of these developments when he said in a paper on Air Power, written in 1917, that nothing we know about warfare can lead us to believe that bombing for terror alone can cause such a morale collapse as to force a major nation to sue for peace.

Churchill emphasized that air power must single out and attack transportation, factories, and other enemy installations, upon which the enemy war-making ability depends.

England's survived of the blitz gives dramatic support to the first part of that statement, and Allied air power is now proving the second part.

INSTALLMENT BUYING

Business is usually squawking about government regulation, but here is one case where merchants want it continued after the war. They want to cherish and preserve Regulation W.

This is the regulation requiring heavy down payments on consumer purchases. For example, the down payment on a $200 refrigerator today—if you could get one—would be about $60, compared with three or four dollars before the war.

Wartime purpose of this regulation is to curb buying and thus reduce inflation. But retail merchants like it for other reasons. It saves them bookkeeping expenses, avoids the nuisance of dunning, and provides cash.

'When Will War End?' Nation's No. 1 Question

Ruhr Valley Bombings Seen as Concrete Evidence of Germany's Inevitable Defeat; Aviation Expert Revises Estimate.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Today Washington, deep as it is in the problems of the moment—on the home front and along the seething globe-scattered sectors where our men are fighting—is more deeply conscious of the future than ever before in history. And that feeling is clearly reflected in every town, city and cross-roads in the country.

The letters I receive express this interest in tomorrow, the many polls on post-war problems and the plans to solve them echo that interest, the comment of leaders, the organization of clubs and forums and committees to discuss them, add up to the largest and healthiest curiosity that the nation has ever seen. The political parties recognize this and the Republicans are busy working on a constructive foreign-policy plank for their 1944 platform to meet the administration's post-war plans.

As the people look toward tomorrow, the first thing they ask is: "When will the war end?" You can't get an official prognostication on that subject and, personally, I would hesitate even to make a guess. But this week, there came to my notice two remarks, one from the German propaganda minister and one from the president of an American aviation corporation which I want to place figuratively in parallel columns—not only side by side with each other but in balance with previous remarks of both men.

Goebbels' Viewpoint

Some time ago, Herr Goebbels spoke of "the Ruhr," that little industrial area including the historic center of Germany's munitions manufacture, the Krupp works of Essen.

Goebbels was on record as saying that the destiny of the Ruhr was the destiny of Germany itself. And then only a few days ago, a broadcaster from Berlin admitted that the "havoc" wrought by the Allied bombers in that area was "incredible."

The other gentleman whom I wish to quote is R. S. Damon, president of the Republic Aviation corporation, which builds those famous P-47 "Thunderbolts," the fighters which have done such an efficient job of protecting our bombers over Europe.

Some time ago Damon predicted that Germany would be knocked out of the war by 1944. But Mr. Damon has now revised that estimate. He says:

"Unpreparedness may have cost us many early rounds but now it appears possible that Germany will have been removed from the lists by the end of 1943. I believe this to be true because no nation, not even Hitler's Germany, can suffer the rate of attrition which is now being inflicted on the Nazis and survive long. The aerial combat box scores are now so definitely in our favor and our constantly increasing production of fine aircraft, and well-trained airmen precludes any possibility of those scores being reduced unless by a miracle, and the days of Hitler's miracles have ceased to be. Our air forces are now systematic and liberally pulverizing the industrial centers of Germany and without her industries, Germany cannot fight or even exist."

Mind you, I do not underwrite this prophecy but I think it is worth recording because both men have revised their views in the direction of a shorter war—Goebbels would never have dwelt on the importance of the Ruhr in the beginning if he knew he would have to admit the degree of its destruction—Damon, after similar consideration, reduces the time he believes it will take to knock Germany out.

Aviation's Growth

In both cases, we have a tribute to the tremendous growth of American combatant airpower. Now let us look at the parallel growth in non-combatant airpower. We turn to no less an authority than the Office of War Information:

"By 1945, it is expected that transport planes in the 100,000-120,000-pound class will be flying in quantity, carrying loads of 15 tons at a speed of 250 miles per hour over distances such as from New York to Chicago.

"By 1946, it is expected that 70 per cent of the passenger travel, now relying on railroad pullmans, will go by air—about 20,000,000 passengers a year.

"Excusive of certain military airdromes, there will be about 865 major airports in the United States by the end of this year, all with paved runways of 3,500 feet or more, capable of handling the largest planes, where fewer than 100 existed in 1940. In addition to these, there are well over 2,000 smaller fields.

"To operate these planes and airports after the war, there will be the 3,000,000 air-minded and trained pilots, navigators, radiomen, airport engineers, traffic controllers and others who will be in the air forces by the end of this year."

The OWI predicts post-war flights of 11 hours from Washington to Paris and London; 7 hours from Washington to Mexico City; 16 from Washington to Moscow; 18 from Washington to Cairo or Buenos Aires and 22 hours from Washington to Tokyo (if Tokyo is still on the map).

I quote these statements to show how tremendously the world we are living in today differs from the world we lived in before Pearl Harbor—a change which must affect all phases of life tomorrow. Already, as far as the military go, the earth has shrunk from the comparative size of an orange to the size of a marble. When the war is over and we have had time to adapt what we have learned in the field of aviation to peaceful transportation, it will shrink to the size of a pea. When we shift our war effort to peacetime production, it will shrink still further.

Utopian Plans

Aviation is only one phase of the achievement the war has forced upon us; there are great plans bursting to become realities, many that seem so utopian that the cynics scoff—a world organization to enforce peace and achieve freedom from fear; world co-operation which will increase production and facilitate distribution to the point where there will be at least an approximation of freedom from want—to tick off only two of the four freedoms for which we are supposed to be fighting.

Discouraged at our inability to realize within our own vast borders all of the dreams of our founding fathers, we cannot believe that the high aims for unity embracing the whole world can be anything but pure fantasy. But if we can shrink the globe from orange to marble, a feat that would have been considered utterly incredible to our own grandfathers, must we say that we cannot build a world unity and a world understanding greater than anything heretofore conceived?

It took a dreamer to put the first wings on man—the laboratory and the machine shop did the rest. With the widespread will to a better future providing the psychological inspiration, who knows but that the energy which has made the prosecution of global war possible can be transmuted into a framework upon which global peace can be built?

It's a smaller globe, after all.

As we begin to think in global terms, we have to adjust our views of geography. For instance, suppose someone should tell you that the important port of Siberia, for which the Japs yearn but do not dare attack, the port of Vladivostok, were a hundred and fifty miles south of the poetic city of Venice with its streets of water? Of course, you would know better but could you say how much better?

Or if someone said flatly to you: "You can't tell me what South American countries a line running straight south from Savannah, Ga., would pass through," you would feel you could at least guess and get one right.

No. No. Naples is 150 miles north of Vladivostok.

You can't name any South American country south of Savannah, Ga., because the western coastline of South America is east of such a point.

Guess again.

JOE KIRKWOOD, the Australian whose trick golf shots have awed galleries from one end of the country to the other, recently was asked to name the hardest shot in golf.

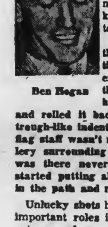
Kirkwood didn't hesitate:

"A straight ball."

Almost any spectator who watches Kirkwood perform his trick shots becomes convinced that there isn't a shot he can't make. The things he does with a golf ball are almost beyond belief. But he never has won a tournament of major importance. His explanation for this fact is both simple and logical.

"I've got so many ways of making a shot that I can't concentrate on any one way in tournament play. The fellows who play orthodox golf have a set way for playing every shot and that's a great advantage.

"I've used trick shots in tournaments. Once I booked a ball around a tree at San Antonio, and a monument was later erected in memory of the shot.



"Another time, while playing with Bobby Jones, I landed in a bunker on the far side of the green, and the only way that I could recover without wasting a stroke was to play the ball backward over my head onto the green. And that's what I did."

The Straight Ball

Kirkwood has the answer to the question of the straight ball:

"It's easy enough to call a low slice, or a high hook, a pull or a fade, but I never feel quite sure when I call for a straight ball. That's the one shot where everything must be perfect, and it rarely is."

In a recent newspaper piece, H. G. Salsinger, top-notch Detroit sportswriter, told of a series of unusual shots.

Ben Hogan

Ben Hogan, the pride of Texas, was betting last summer that he could sink 50 straight putts from 10 feet out. He made the bet several times and collected every bet he made. But until you know how, don't try to imitate him.

Hogan laid down the flag on the practice green with one end on the edge of the cup. He placed his foot on the staff and rolled it back and forth. The trough-like indentation made by the flag staff wasn't noticed by the gallery surrounding the green, but it was there nevertheless. When he started putting all the balls stayed in the path and rolled into the cup.

Unlucky shots have played all too important roles in determining the outcome of more than one important tournament.

Ed Dudley was eliminated from the Professional Golfers' association championship last year when his ball connected with the head of a spectator.

It was back in the 1938 National Open at Denver that Ray Ainsley took 19 strokes on one hole. His ball landed in a fast creek and he tried to hook it out.

Snead's Nightmare

In 1939 Sam Snead tossed away the national championship at Philadelphia. He took a terrible 8 on the last hole of the National Open when a par 5 would have won for him.

Johnny Revolta missed his chance in the Land of the Sky Open at Asheville when he six-putted a green. That should make John J. Dub feel considerably better.

Jim Turnesa ran into bad luck while playing the 17th hole of the 1942 PGA tournament in Atlantic City. His tee shot landed on a bottle, broke the bottle, and forced him to take eight strokes on a par 4 hole.

Sam Snead hasn't been noted for his good luck. He lost the final round of the PGA tournament at Hershey, Pa., to Byron Nelson, even though he fired a blistering 68, five under par, at Nelson.

The Nelson-Snead match was squared at the end of 33 holes. Both poured long tee shots off the 417-yard 16th—the 34th hole for them. Byron pitched his next stiff. It bit into the green one foot from the cup for a sure birdie three. It was the best shot he made in 209 holes of tournament play. Snead, on in two, rapped a 25-footer into the cup and it bounced out, banging on the lip. That was the break of the match, for they halved the next two.

TO YOUR Good Health

by DR. JAMES W. BARTON

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

FATIGUE AND WORK CONDITIONS

One of the things I learned as a boy was that even if we failed to observe the seventh or Sabbath day as a day of rest on religious grounds, every seventh day should be a day of rest for the sake of health. It was pointed out that when a certain nation decided to make every 10th day a day of rest instead of every seventh day, the health of the people suffered and every seventh day was again established as a day of rest.

Today we are facing the problem of how to get the most work done each week or each day and how much time should be given to sleep and to recreation in order to get the most and the best work done.

An editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, entitled "Fatigue and Working Conditions" states:

"Mechanization, speeding of industrial processes and mass production of the war effort have combined to present new problems in industrial health. The illness of the workers, their accident rates and the amount of work they do have been shown to be closely related to fatigue."

Now, we all get tired at times but the amount or degree of tiredness varies with how much and how monotonous or interesting our work is, and how long we stay at work each day or each week.

Quoting Dr. R. R. Sayers who made extensive studies of fatigue, there are three degrees of fatigue: (a) temporary, (b) moderate (subacute), and (c) chronic fatigue. Temporary fatigue passes away after a short rest and work is resumed and performed as well as before. Subacute or moderate fatigue requires more rest or chronic fatigue may occur. Chronic fatigue may end with disabling illness.

How many hours should our men and women work? Some industrial plants who have tried 14, 12 and 10 hours, found that each decrease in number of hours of work resulted in an increase in amount of work done. Below eight hours there was no increase in work done in a day. Where one day in seven is given to rest, 10 hours daily gave the greatest output of work.

What about sleep? Up to the age of 21, there should be not less than eight hours sleep each night or 56 hours per week. After the age of 21, there should be not less than 50 hours per week, which is about seven each night.

These figures should be studied by employers and employees.

Excess Weight Shortens Life

One hundred years ago the expectation of life was about 40 years; today it is more than 65 years. A gain of 25 years in life span in less than 100 years breaks all previous records. The fact that more babies are saved at birth and during the first year is one big factor in lengthening the life span; another is the saving of life from the infectious diseases of childhood by the use of vaccines. And now with the sulfanilamide drugs, pneumonia, which formerly had a death rate of nearly 10 per cent, has a death rate of less than 3 per cent.

It is, of course, true that if the lives of youngsters are saved and the middle-aged adults are prolonged, there will be twice as many older individuals to be cared for than at present. This means that more cases of heart disease, cancer and diabetes will occur.

While infection can cause or aggravate these three diseases, overeating and the acquiring of much excess weight is a most important factor. Fortunately, overweight can be prevented by care and sacrifice on the part of the individual and proper treatment.

Aside from the above diseases caused or aggravated by overweight is the matter of the life span. In his book "Diabetic Manual," Dr. E. P. Joslin has an illustration showing how 10 fat and 10 lean men, aged 30, fare as they walk through life. At the age of 40 there are nine fat men and nine lean men living; at 50 there are only six fat men but still nine lean men; at 70, one fat man and three lean men are living.

The lesson then is that if we want to feel well, be able to play or work at our best, and live longer, we should avoid overweight.

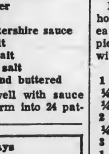
Barbecued Beef on Buns Tastes Good

(See Recipe Below)

Fun Outdoors

Your family will like eating outdoors for nothing seems so good as beef barbecues or hamburgers served in the open when appetites are their sharpest, or coffee made on a make-shift stove from a couple of large bricks maneuvered to hold the old granite coffee pot in place.

Food is good and wholesome, and there's plenty of it whether you cook it at home and wrap it up to take with you to the spot of your choice, or if you gather twigs and cook to order. Make use of the back yard for your barbecue, or take to the woods or lake, even if you have to use the bicycle. The change from eating on the dining room table will be a welcome change and will do wonders toward perking up summer appetites.



Make outdoor eating as convenient as dining at home. Be sure to include such things as salt and pepper, napkins, plenty of cups, plates and silverware in your basket to make the family comfortable.

A spicy sauce with beef or veal makes up a delicious barbecue. The pound and a quarter of meat is enough for 12 buns—just in case you're interested in stretching those precious red points:

Barbecued Beef on Buns.
1½ pounds beef or veal
1 cup thinly sliced onions
1 clove garlic, chopped (optional)
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
½ cup catsup
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

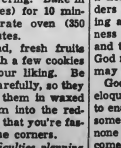
Cut meat in 1-inch cubes and brown in hot fat. Add 1 cup water and simmer 1½ hours until tender. Brown onions and garlic in hot fat and add to cooked meat with remainder of ingredients. Make an outdoor stove or wrap carefully in container with plenty of towels to keep warm, and take to barbecue. To serve, spoon on to warmed buns.

Hamburgers are still a great favorite for outdoor eating, particularly now since hamburger still has fairly low point value. This recipe makes tasty and tender, well - seasoned hamburgers:

Prize Hamburgers
(Makes 24 hamburgers)
4 pounds hamburger
½ cup chili sauce
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1½ tablespoons salt
1 teaspoon onion salt
½ teaspoon celery salt
24 buns, toasted and buttered

Mix hamburger well with sauce and seasonings. Form into 24 patties and fry slowly in hot fat until browned and done, on both sides. When nearly done invert the bottom half of a bun over the hamburger so that bun will be steamed and toasted. The other half may be toasting on a stick while one rests on bamburger. Place other half on hamburger when ready to eat.

Many families are fond of barbecued spareribs on their jaunts outdoors. You'll like this one, particularly the sauce:



Barbecued Spareribs.
(Serves 4)
3 to 4 pounds ribs, cut in pieces
1 lemon
1 large onion
1 cup catsup
½ cup Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon chili powder
1 teaspoon salt
2 dashes tabasco sauce
2 cups water

Place ribs in shallow roasting pan, meaty side up. On each piece place an unpeeled slice of lemon, a thin slice of onion. Roast in hot oven (450 degrees), 30 minutes. Combine remaining ingredients, bring to a boil and pour over ribs. Continue baking in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 30 minutes. Baste ribs several times with sauce.

Let the green salad for the outdoor supper be as green and sprightly as you can make it. A smart idea in making the salad is to toss all the greens together, but add the salad dressing only just before eating to allow the salad to keep its crispness:

Chef's Favorite Salad.
½ head of lettuce
2 cups spinach leaves
2 tomatoes, cut in wedges
½ cup sliced radishes
½ green pepper, cut in rings
3 green onions
1 stalk celery, cut in pieces
¼ cup french dressing

Break lettuce into bite-sized pieces and toss together with other vegetables. Just before serving, add dressing and serve from large bowl. Have all ingredients well chilled.

If you have a host of hearty eaters and would enjoy a luscious pie, the combination of strawberries with rhubarb is a happy choice:

Strawberry-Rhubarb Pie.
1 cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
2 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
¼ cup orange juice
3 cups cut rhubarb
1 recipe pastry
1 cup sliced strawberries
1 tablespoon butter

Combine sugar, salt, nutmeg, tapioca, orange juice and rhubarb; place in 9-inch pie pan lined with pastry. Top with strawberries and dot with butter. Arrange whole pastry top or lattice covering. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees) for 10 minutes, then in moderate oven (350 degrees) for 30 minutes.

On the other hand, fresh fruits by themselves or with a few cookies may be more to your liking. Be sure to wash them carefully, so they do not bruise, wrap them in waxed paper, and toss them into the red-checkered tablecloth that you're fastening together at the corners.

GOD ENCOURAGES MOSES

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 3:13-16; 4:10-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Certainly I will be with thee.—Exodus 3:12.

Encouragement is something much needed, and not too often given. The word means to put some new thing into the heart of another, that is, to hearten and assure him, especially in the bearing of a heavy responsibility.

Moses, in all probability the world's greatest military and national leader, was about to lead his people out from under the mighty hand of Pharaoh. His final preparation for that epochal deed and all the years to follow was a personal meeting with God.

Possibly it was the mistake Moses had made and which caused him to be sent into the back of the desert, that now caused him to move with—

I. Understandable Caution (Exod. 3:13).

There is something remarkably fine about real humility. It commends itself to our thinking as the proper attitude of a mortal being, particularly in the face of spiritual responsibility.

Neither God nor man dares entrust a high and difficult commission to foolish men who brusquely "rushes in where angels fear to tread." The fact that one feels fully and unhesitatingly qualified to take over such a responsibility is almost a certain indication that he is not the man to assume it.

Moses' request for God's backing must have been acceptable to Him, for He gave Moses—

II. Unlimited Authority (3:14-16).

Moses went as God's messenger. He was authorized to put all the majesty and power of the Infinite One behind his words and acts.

The ambassador must have credentials. God's representative has them. When "they shall say"—what an important and difficult situation that creates. The one who speaks for God must expect not only the scornful bitterness of God's enemies, but also the unbelieving questions of those whom he seeks to serve.

"What shall I say?" asks Moses, and God answers that he may say that "I AM" had sent him. This name of God reveals Him as the eternal, independent, self-sufficient, self-existent, immutable, personal Being. Consider, Christian brethren, whose we are and whom we serve.

But Moses seems to have been unable to see beyond his own human infirmity even in the light of such a glorious revelation, supplemented as it was by miraculous powers, and we find him showing an—

III. Unjustified Humility (4:10-13).

Perhaps we should not call this humility at all, for in one so divinely called and encouraged it was an act of unbelief and almost impertinence.

When God calls a man He knows his limitations. Why then should one plead them as an excuse for not serving? The excuse of Moses that he was not a fluent speaker has been the standby of unwilling workers all through the ages. When asked to lead a prayer meeting, teach a Sunday school class, conduct a young people's meeting, thousands upon thousands have lamely thus excused themselves and missed a blessing.

The perfect answer of God (v. 11) merits attention. God made your mouth and mine. He gives us the power of speech. He asks not the eloquence of polished rhetorical phrases, or the flights of man's imagination. He wants but the incomparable eloquence of His own words on our lips.

No man should think too highly of himself, but let him beware lest he think too lowly about God. We are not sufficient for the opportunity. But God is more than sufficient.

Having called Moses, God saw to it that Moses went on with His work even though now He had to call in Moses' older brother to help him. It was, in fact, an—

IV. Unnecessary Substitution (4:14-17).

Loving and patient is our God, but, mark it well, there is a boundary line to that patience. Moses went too far in his needless humility, and really reflected on the ability of God. God promptly substituted Aaron as the spokesman.

Gracious was He in thus providing a helper for Moses. But one wonders what Moses missed of blessing and power because of his slowness of heart. To decline the labor and the responsibility of service for God means loss far greater than we may ever know.

God's dealings with Moses speak eloquently to us of His willingness to enable and use a man who lacked some of the gifts for leadership. Let none of us be like Moses and become involved in needless worry about our gifts, and forget God's purpose and enabling power. When God calls, our gifts are not the controlling factor; in fact, they are not a great factor at all. The question then becomes, Is God able? Let us trust and obey Him.

Flag at Half-Mast

The United States flag should never be flown at half-mast except when national mourning is officially declared for a national figure or a catastrophe affecting the whole country, says Collier's. A state, city or organization flag should be used to mourn a person of only state, city or organization prominence.

If you know a Navy man, don't ever call him a "gob"—sailors consider the name an insult. You can get on the right side of him though if you offer him a Camel—or better yet, send him a carton. Camels are the favorite cigarette with men in the Navy (Army, Marines, Coast Guard, too, for that matter) based on actual sales records from the service men's stores. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

Origin of 'Two Bits'

The term "two bits" was coined in San Francisco in days before mints were in existence and gold wire was chipped up for currency.

Today's Travels

TO KNOW the highways of the nation has long been the business of our Travel Bureau. To chart the roads on legible maps, to classify them as to surface and character, to spot the sections where construction or other obstacles block traffic—and to tell all who may inquire—these are the full-time specialty of Kyso Motor Travel Bureau.

Designed to function in peace time, it has been wholly converted to a war time basis. Pleasure trips are "out" for the duration, but many highways are very busy, nevertheless. Officers and men are hastening to camps, or moving from camp to camp, or "heading for home" on leaves and furloughs.

It is important for them to save time—miles—gasoline—rubber. They ask our Travel Bureau to help them to conserve—cut corners—avoid costly detours. The same consideration applies to commercial vehicles, bound on missions of war necessity.... This service is free.

European Corn Borer Infests Local Gardens

The European Corn Borer is severely damaging early sweet corn in the county according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The borers are attacking the tassels, stalks and ears.

Dr. W. A. Price, State Entomologist and head of the Department of Entomology at the College o. Agriculture, in a letter to the county agent's office, the first part of the week, gave the following information.

"I have your letter of July 8 and the specimens of insects which you sent in for identification. These little individuals are European corn borers.

Control measures in field corn are essentially those that I discussed with you early in the spring,—namely, (1) Late planting; (2) Use of resistant varieties; and (3) Destruction of the remnants of the old crop. Of course, none of these are applicable at the present time where the insects are on sweet corn. Insecticides can be used by the gardener, with some degree of success. Dusting or spraying with nicotine or rotenone has given the best results. Either material must be applied four or five times, first when the borers begin to hatch and later at five-day intervals. If nicotine is used, I suggest the following formula for making 6-¼ gallons of spray:

Water— 6 and one-fourth gal.; Spreading agent—one-third oz., dry weight; Nicotine sulphate—1 oz., fluid; Wyoming bentonite clay—4 ounces, dry weight.

If the dus tis used, I recommend rotenone carrying one per cent or its equivalent of the active principle.

Any of these insecticides mentioned are only partially effective and considering the fact that the worms are already working on the corn, I would be hesitant about recommending these treatments this year.

Agent Warns About Use Of Jar Lids

Due to reported disasterous results from improper use of the glass top sealing jars it is appropriate that publicity be given to the proper use of this equipment. Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent, has received special information from authoriative sources during this last week and calls attention to the following facts:

1. The glass top with a metal ring is not to be used in oven canner.

2. Examine top edge of jar. This must be smooth, even and clean to assure perfect seal.

3. Wash jars, lids, and rubbers in warm soapy water. Rinse. Cover with warm water. Boil to sterilize. Keep hot until needed.

4. If processing , (cooking in jar), LEAVE 1 ONCH IN TOP OF JAR.. If using open kettle, leave ½ inch space in top of jar.

5. Fit wet rubber around projection on under side of lid.

6. Place lid so rubber lies between lid and top edge of jar.

7. Turn bands tight, then loosen slightly (about ¼ turn)—bands must fit loosely during processing (cooking). This is IMPORTANT and must be done to insure best results. If using open kettle, screw bands tight as soon as jar is filled.

8. After processing, screw bands tight to complete seal. Remove bands 12 hours after canning.

9. To open—run point of knife under rubber to admit air and break seal.

DO NOT TURN FILLED JARS UPSIDE DOWN.

Willard Russell McClure Home On 14 Day Furlough.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard McClure of Erlanger want to let their many friends know through this paper that their son Willard Russell McClure of Camp Crowder Missouria is now spending a 14 day furlough at his home and with relatives.

Russell having just finished a course in Officer's Training will return Monday to Camp Crowder Missouria.

Russell is a bright boy and our best wishes go with him.

He is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Reffith of Walton Route 2.

Demonstration Series Completed

Canning Demonstrations throughout the county have been completed, according to Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent. Meetings were held in twelve communities, with a total attendance of 167 persons. Literature was distributed at the meetings and via neighborhood leaders and homemakers in the communities. Mrs. Moore and Miss Virginia Crawford, Home Management Supervisor of the Farm Security have answered questions and helped solve many of the difficulties reported by canners this year. Persons are urged to report problems to Mrs. Moore and ask her advice concerning them.

High Points of Demonstrations

Canning by the homemaker does not have to be inferior grade products, rather it should be GRADE A canned goods. She will assure herself this standard if she observes the following points:

I. One hour from the garden to the can, to preserve freshness and food value and to eliminate the development of undesirable bacteria after picking.

2. Can only products that are firm and sound at the height of maturity, avoid defective, old or over ripe products.

3. Check jars, lids, rubber rings carefully, and observe directons regarding the particular type being used.

4. Hot pack all foods except tomatoes, allowing ½ to ¼ inch space in top of the jars. Do not pack products too tightly, but try to make pack economical.

5. Count processing time from the time water hits a boil in the canner (or pressure reaches 10 lb) and count only the time during which the water boils, carefully using the time table for processing the foods.

6. Remove immediately when time is finished, and seal those jars requiring sealing. Do not leave standing bottom up for cooling.

7. Metal rings may be removed from all vacu-sealing jars after they have cooled 24 hours. This is also true of the new two piece glass and metal lids.

WHY WE BOMB THE RUHR VALLEY

SICILY:
Allies Advance

As a great bridge of 3,000 ships poured troops onto conquered beachheads of Sicily, American forces drove 20 miles inland to join up with the British at Ragusa, an important communication junction dominating high ground in the area.

Along the eastern coast of the island, the British captured the naval base of Augusta and then made landings to the south of the great port of Catania. The movements placed Gen. Bernard Montgomery's forces within 55 miles of Messina, terminal of the ferry route from the toe of the Italian boot.

Only around the American beachhead of Gela did heavy early fighting develop. Here, the celebrated Goering division teamed with an Italian force to counter-attack, and though the enemy drove through to the sandy shore, Gen. George Patton's troops sealed the breach.

Against the 144,000 Axis troops defending Sicily, the Allies were reputed to have put up at least 10 divisions of 150,000 men in the early stages of the campaign. With airdromes established in the island's picturesque olive groves of the southeast, Allied airmen assaulted enemy landing fields, shot up motorized convoys and roads, and bombed shipping to the north.

PACIFIC:
Win Another Round

Hovering in the approaches of the Kula gulf, American naval units took another broadside at Japanese warships seeking to supply enemy troops penned at the Munda airfield on New Georgia island. In the exchange of salvos, four and probably six Jap cruisers and destroyers were sunk. No American losses were announced.

Near Munda, American troops, picking their way through the thick jungle, encountered stiffening resistance from the entrapped enemy. Earlier, U. S. forces had wiped out a Japanese stronghold on an inlet to the northeast of the island.

Collaborating with the sea and ground forces, American airmen continued hammering at Japanese installations throughout the 700-mile arc of offensive. The enemy air base at Vila above New Georgia island and another in the Shortland islands to the northwest were raided.

In New Guinea, the Allies were making use of the supply route from the beach where General MacArthur had established a base early in the offensive, to Mubo, about 15 miles inland and just below the Japanese stronghold of Salamaua.

WAR BUREAUS:
Get $2,911,697,224

After paring the OPA's request for funds by 22 million dollars and the Office of War Information's by 16 million dollars, congress appropriated $2,911,697,224 for the government's war agencies in bills approved by President Roosevelt.

A total of 846 million dollars was appropriated for the department of agriculture. The department of the interior received 105 million dollars, including 22 million dollars for the irrigation of food producing lands. Other bills provide for 100 million dollars for new war housing and 15 million dollars for flood relief.

Also signed by the President was legislation for authorizing the use of government held silver for industrial purposes; for establishing a pharmacy corps in the army; for providing for emergency flood control work, and for settling boundary lines between Iowa and Nebraska.

CROPS:
Prospects Down

Overall crop production for 1943 is expected to be about 10 per cent below last year, according to estimates of the department of agriculture. With a tight situation in corn already existent, it was predicted current acreage would yield 2 billion, 706½ million bushels, 15 per cent below the 1942 harvest.

Wheat production is expected to approximate 760,823,000 bushels, 200 millions below 1942. Oats were expected to be down 8.6 per cent at 1 billion 242½ million bushels; barley down 17.4 per cent at 350 million bushels, and rye down 41 per cent at 33,562,000 bushels.

Generally good yields were expected from the 15,434,000 acres of soybeans seeded. Approximately 39 per cent less sugar beet acreage was planted than in 1942. However, higher acreage for dry beans, peas, peanuts, flaxseed, rice and potatoes spelled higher production. Truck crops were expected to drop 11 per cent.

In signing the $846,000,000 agricultural supply bill, President Roosevelt deprecated the elimination of crop insurance from the measure. Congress had provided over $3,000,000 for liquidation of the service.

RUSSIA:
Reds Counter-Attack

Bitter fighting on the Russian front spread, with Russian units counter-attacking fiercely above Orel, northernmost pivot of the 160-mile front bending southward to Belgorod.

Announcement of the counter-attack was made by the Nazis after the Russians had claimed that they had checked the Germans in the Orel-Belgorod region after initial break-throughs.

In the battle of the giants, London said, the Nazis had thrust wedges of 20 miles into Russian lines above Belgorod, but that the Reds had temporarily slowed the drives and were now throwing their tanks and artillery at the German flanks in an effort to pinch them off from the main forces.

Besides claiming successes around Belgorod, the Nazis asserted they had progressed at the northern anchor of Orel. Some extent of the fighting may be gleaned from Nazi and Russian claims, which put total tank losses at 3,000.

FOOD:
Less Dairy Products

The 46.3 pounds of butter, cheese canned and dried milk consumed by Americans in 1942 will be cut to 31.3 pounds in the next 12 months following the War Food administration's allocation of supplies among civilians, the military and lend-lease.

Of the four products, only butter production will drop for the period, from 2 billion 170 million pounds to 1 billion 670 million pounds. Under the allocation, every person will receive 13.5 pounds of butter for the 12 months compared with 16.5 pounds in 1942.

Cheese output is expected to soar to 915 million pounds, but civilian quotas will approximate 4.1 pounds per person against 6.7 pounds last year. Despite record production of canned and dried milk, every consumer will get 8.4 pounds less of canned milk for a total of 12.1 pounds and 1 pound less of dried milk or 1.6 pounds in all.

WFA pointed out that these quotas are subject to change, depending upon the rate of production throughout the next 12 months. Therefore, they may go up, or again, they may go down.

GAS-LESS AUTO RACE

An automobile race was staged in Brazil recently which should interest gas-less Americans. Thirty-two cars took part, and not one of them used a drop of gasoline.

Each car was equipped with a charcoal burning apparatus known as "gasogene," producing a charcoal gas whose combustion takes the place of the combustion of gasoline in the ordinary automobile engine.

These devices have been so successful in Brazil that they are being produced at the rate of 40 a day, selling for about $200 each. Some of the units are capable of generating a thousand horsepower, and are used even on the inter-city buses between Santos and Sao Paulo.

Brazil has practically no petroleum resources of her own.

TANKERS DELIVER PLANES

Everybody knows that bombers have long been delivered to England under their own power. But the big problem has been to deliver fighter planes, which have had to be taken apart, crated, then reassembled on the other side.

Now, however, a new system has been devised whereby U. S. tankers are carrying fighters on deck—20 to each tanker—and setting them down a few days later in England.

The War Shipping administration is keeping the army "cleaned out of fighters" by this method of delivery, and is rapidly building up the strength of the Eighth Air Forces command which is battering Germany.

Note: PT boats are also being delivered to England on the decks of tankers.

NO GERMAN SAUSAGE

The diplomats' grapevine reports that the German food supply is running low. A new cut has been made in the meat ration. This, coming at a time when the greatest muscle must be exerted in defense of the Vaterland, is expected to be a severe blow to German morale.

The basic ration of meat for normal uses was 400 grams at this time last year. But now the ration has been cut to 250 grams—which is about half a pound per week, including fat and bone. An effort is being made to compensate this reduction by the substitution of cheese and groats (hulled and crushed oats and wheat). During the winter, however, it was reduced to 300 grams. In the spring the cut was partially restored, when the ration was moved up to 350 grams, recognizing the necessity of more nourishment with the coming of the season of greater military activity.

ARMY AND GOLD MINING

American soldiers who spent dreary winters tracking through the Arctic forest to build the Alcan highway to Alaska frequently saw the sparkle of gold in the stream beds, and wanted to stake out claims for peacetime development. They were not allowed to do so.

Now, however, civilian construction crews are coming along the same trail, and are staking out claims for the gold which U. S. soldiers could not touch.

Boys from almost every state were sent to Alaska on that pioneering job—cutting a road through tall timber where none but Indians had passed before. They worked from Dawson Creek, in Alberta, to Fairbanks, Alaska, but the place where they saw the gleaming gold was in the Yukon, near Whitehorse.

At first, there was little time to think about private projects, for one battalion was racing against another to complete its 20-mile stretch of highway. But when a lull came in the work, the men asked permission to try their luck at panning gold. The officers, however, ruled this out.

Another season has rolled around, and things have changed. The pioneer road is being replaced by a permanent highway, built by big construction companies—Elliott Construction Co., and Becketel, Price and Callahan.

These companies have mining engineers attached to the construction gangs, and they are not bound by military discipline.

Note: Finally the army has modified its regulations to permit a little amateur gold panning by soldiers in Alaska, for recreational purposes. This activity will be in the same class with fishing, to give the soldiers sport in their spare time.

FDR Must Take Helm Again To Achieve National Unity

Administration, Congress Must Get Tough In Throttling Various Pressure Groups Seeking Advantages for Few.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

In the next few weeks decisions will be reached which will affect the length of the war and they will not be made on the military fronts. They will be made in small town offices, leaning across fences, down at the post office or the court house, on front stoops, at the Elks club, in the lodge rooms and after meetin's of one kind or another in every middlesex, village and farm in the country.

They will result from conversations between the congressmen, home to mend their 1944 fences, and their constituents. The nation faces a crisis on the home front. Unless it is solved in the common sense American way, it is going to prolong the war months, and perhaps longer. Its presence has already delayed the capitulation of Italy, according to some of the more pessimistic pessimists around Washington.

As success on the battlefront grows, the efforts of those trying to support a total war are being defeated on the home front.

Two Events

Two events mark the low in unified effort for victory. One was when a reporter, with no evil innuendo in his mind as far as I know (and I know the man), asked the President if he would make any comment for background on the statement that although things were going well on the battlefront, they were not going so well on the administration front (meaning home front). The President replied with a castigation of the press and radio. Some of their representatives, he said, were encouraging governmental friction. He could have given a blasting, rip-roaring answer which would have encouraged the country. As it was, he made some of the men whose job it is to interpret the news to the country, too mad to be objective.

The second event which marked the nadir in shoulder-to-shoulder effort on the home front was when congress came within an eyelash of killing the use of any and all subsidies which would have broken a wide hole in the anti-inflation dam. Let me state immediately that I do not believe that subsidies is the panacea for our inflation ills, but to have wiped them out completely at that time would have meant jerking the one, wobbling support we did have right out from under the price-control structure.

Since then the President has perked up and taken a positive stand and congress on second thought modified its berserk mood and evolved a compromise.

Now it is up to the people. If the congressmen are convinced that they can afford to go national and not be defeated a year from November; if they are convinced that the people will support their votes if they vote for what they think the country needs and not to suit the pressure groups that sit on their desks all day, the crisis will pass.

Crack-Down Necessary

The objectives are pretty clear.

In the first place, the President has got to take the helm again. He has got to crack down. He has got to see that dissensions do not break out. He has got to see to it that the secretary of the treasury comes out with a clear-cut tax and savings program which will absorb the inflation dollars. Congress will have to support that program.

The pressure groups whose purpose it is to get their members more money for products or wages, will have to be throttled. This means that the administration has to be tough. Congress will have to have courage. The people will have to support their elected representatives.

The vast majority of Americans are perfectly willing to carry their share of the load. They are not willing to make sacrifices if they believe someone else is getting the benefit and shirking their share. The farmer will work the skin off his hands and take a meager reward if it's for the good of the country and the boy he spared to join the army. But not if somebody tells him the workman is making all the money at an easy job.

The workman will face higher living costs—and he certainly has to, without a wage raise, until somebody comes along and tells him the farmer is getting rich and that is why his food costs go up. And so on.

The reason why I believe this is because I receive letters like the following:

"My husband is 67 years old —working and making $38.00 a week when tax is taken out. We are buying two war bonds each month—but we have a son in the navy—and one designing aviation tools in a plant in Atlanta. Perhaps he, too will soon be in the service, though married he has no children—yet.

"We are like many—trying to carry our end of the war effort—but we have many friends and relatives who though making bundreds a month don't buy a bond. These same people went through the depression—with jobs—while we took it the hard way. Our two boys suffered from malnutrition during those years.

"Don't you think this makes a difference in point of view? You see we suffered — making us think. My boys bought war bonds right from the start. Their dad and I feel the need of a decent world to live in, too, for we had to live in a deprived world for several years. It gave us a different slant on life. We want a decent world for our children and grandchildren—and other people's children.

"Selfishness and greed will have to go—if we are to have that decent world."

If a congressman's constituents talk to him that way, we won't have much more trouble on the home front. Hitler will have to begin worrying again.

Diary of a Broadcaster

The Washington atmosphere affects strangers who tarry long within the shadow of the Washington monument or the Capitol dome. It affects not only the so-called higher species but the citizens of cat-and-dogdom as well. Today, I came down town at an odd hour—an interesting hour. I was a little later than usual. The war workers and the boarding-house cats and the alley pups, which walt until the workers are out of the way, had vanished on their various duties; only an indolent and disreputable Tom still paused to massage its hips against a garbage can, and a yellowish part-fox terrier, certainly part, and from his brush, certainly more fox than terrier, lay in the exact center of the alley where anything that ran down the middle gutter would eventually reach him.

These creatures sniff at protocol and treat it as they do anything else they sniff at. But that hour is also the hour of the pet parade, for the handsome creatures that strain at leashes. The most unhappy person I meet at this bewitching hour is a thin little relic of a butler, who is literally torn between losing his dignity and his grip on one of the embassy great danes.

No men like to walk dogs. All dogs like to walk men. But one gentleman dog nurse dared me to stare him down. He was being led by a stiff-legged aristocrat, a young wired-haired fox, as white and starched as if his proud mamma prepared him for a birthday party. Then there was the sad-eyed cocker, who dropped its eyes, sadder still when it realized I had noted that its mistress was wearing a far too informal house dress for polite street wear.

And then, there was the little one-by-five, it undulated along with a rather forced smile. It was a dachshund and probably anti-Nazi. It was hustling along like a caterpillar in high gear, trotting with its hind legs, and hopping with its little turtle-paws in front.

I even met a feline on a leash, a great big tortoiseshell Thomas—it looked as if it was safer that way for the rest of us—all I could think of was "tiger, tiger, burning bright in the jungle of the night."

Australian Aborigines

Although the white colonization of Australia began in 1788, the majority of its aborigines still do not know how to cultivate land, make clothes or build a shelter other than a windbreak, says Collier's. These people have always been looked upon as little more than animals. In fact, up to 40 years ago, a settler merely required a permit to "shoot, poison or otherwise kill" them at will.

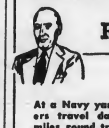
Cautions for Home Canners

Housewives doing home canning with wartime jar caps are cautioned to follow implicitly the instructions of the cap manufacturers if they wish to avoid unhappy experiences and waste in their patriotic effort to conserve. Spoilage of food and breakage of jars is certain to result, if instructions are not followed to the letter.

Proper methods and careful canning will insure excellent results, more important in the present food situation than at any other time.

The Glass-Top Seal Fruit Jar Cap, a wartime product developed to conserve metal, requires careful use, according to the home service departments of fruit jar manufacturers. This cap consists of a metal band, glass lid and rubber ring. With these three widely varied materials making up its component parts, the cap must be used according to important but easily followed instructions. First of all, the cap is not recommended for, and must not be used in, oven canning.



If the food is processed (cooked in a jar), one inch of space must be left in the top of the jar when filled, in order to allow room for expansion. If an open kettle is used a half-inch of space must be left in the top of the jar.

The next step is to place the rubber around the projection on the bottom side of the lid, and the lid must then be placed so that the rubber lies between it and the top edge of the jar. All jars on which top-seal closures, either glass or metal, are used must have smooth-top edges.
